With right hands plighted, pledges of good-will. Fairy Queen.

TO CONGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To take leave.

I have conged with the duke, and done my adieu with his nearest. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.

CONGE D'ELIRE is French; and signifies, in common law, the king's permission royal to a dean and chapter, in time of vacation, to chuse a bishop. The king, as sovereign patron of all archbishops, bishops, and other ecclesiastical benefices, had, in ancient times, the free appointment of all ecclesiastical dignities; investing them first per baculum & annulum, and afterwards by his letters patent. In process of time he made the election over to others, under certain forms and conditions; as, that they should, at every vacation, before they chuse, demand of the king a congē d'elire, that is, licence to proceed to election. Cowell.

A woman, when she has made her own choice, for form's sake, sends a congē d'elire to her friends. Spektator.

CONGE. n. f. [In architecture.] A moulding in form of a quarter round, or a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another: such is that which joins the shaft of the column to the cincture. Gambler.

TO CONGEAL. v. a. [from congelare, Latin.]

1. To turn, by frost, from a fluid to a solid state.

What more miraculous thing may be told,
Than ice, which is congeal'd with senseless cold,
Should kindle fire by wonderful device? Spenser.

In whose capacious womb

A vapoury deluge lies to snow congeal'd.

Thomson's Winter.

2. To bind or fix, as by cold.

Oh, gentlemen, see! see dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood. Shakespeare.

TO CONGEAL. v. n. To concreate; to gather into a mass by cold.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, into which put quicksilver wrapt in linen, and it will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon.

When water congeals, the surface of the ice is smooth and level, as the surface of the water was before. Burnet's Theory.

CONGEALMENT. n. f. [from congeal.] The clot formed by congelation; concretion.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats, whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

CONGEALABLE. adj. [from congeal.] Susceptible of congelation; capable of losing its fluidity.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers: dense, rare, tangible, pneumatical, fixed, hard, soft, congealable, not congealable, liquefiable, not liquefiable. Bacon.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fixable in the fire, and congealable again by cold into brittle globes or crystals. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CONGELATION. n. f. [from congeal.]

1. Act of turning fluids to solids, by cold.

The capillary tubes are obstructed either by outward compression or congelation of the fluid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

There are congelations of the redundant water, precipitations, and many other operations. Arbutnot on Air.

2. State of being congealed, or made solid, by cold.

Many waters and springs will never freeze; and many parts in rivers and lakes, where there are mineral eruptions, will still persist without congelation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONGENER. n. f. [Latin.] Of the same kind or nature.

The cherry-tree has been often grafted on the laurel, to which it is a congener. Miller.

CONGENEROUS. adj. [from congener, Latin.] Of the same kind; arising from the same original.

Those bodies, being of a congenereous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

From extreme and lasting colds proceeds a great run of apoplexies, and other congenereous diseases. Arbutnot on Air.

CONGENEROUSNESS. n. f. [from congenereous.] The quality of being from the same original; belonging to the same class. Dict.

CONGENIAL. adj. [from con and genus, Latin.] Partaking of the same genus; kindred; cognate: in Swift it is followed by with.

He sprung without any help, by a kind of congenial compofure, as we may term it, to the likeness of our late sovereign and master. Wotton.

You look with pleasure on those things which are somewhat congenial, and of a remote kindred to your own conceptions. Dryden's Dedication of Juvenal.

Smit with the love of sister arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

He acquires a courage, and stiffness of opinion, not at all congenial with him. Swift.

CONGENIALITY. n. f. [from congenial.] Participation of the same genius; cognation of mind, or nature.

well proportioned fabricks; yet they appear so but in that twilight, which is requisite to their conspicuousness. Boyle's Poem. I. 151.

2. Eminence; fame; celebrity.

Their writings attract more readers by the author's conspicuousness. Boyle on Colours.

CONSPI'RACY. n. f. [from conspiratio, Latin.]
1. A private agreement among several persons to commit some crime; a plot; a concerted treason.

O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free?

Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates, Against my life. Shakespeare's Tempest.

When scarce he had escap'd the blow
Of faction and conspiracy,

Death did his promis'd hopes destroy. Dryden.

2. In law, an agreement of men to do any thing; always taken in the evil part. It is taken for a confederacy of two at the least, falsely to indict one, or to procure one to be indicted of felony. Corwell.

3. A concurrence; a general tendency of many causes to one event.

When the time now came that misery was ripe for him, there was a conspiracy in all heavenly and earthly things, to frame fit occasions to lead him unto it. Sidney.

The air appearing so malicious in this morbid conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard.

Harvey on Consumptions.

CON

CONSPI'RANT. adj. [from conspirans, Latin.] Conspiring; engaged in a conspiracy or plot; plotting.

Thou art a traitor,
Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious prince.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

CONSPI'RATION. n. f. [from conspiratio, Latin.] An agreement of many to one end.

One would wonder, how from so differing premises, they should infer the same conclusion, were it not that the conspiracy of interest were too potent for the diversity of judgment. Decay of Piety.

CONSPI'RATOR. n. f. [from conspiro, Latin.]
A man engaged in a plot; one who has secretly concerted with others commission of a crime; a plotter.

Achitophel is amongst the conspirators with Ablalom. 2 Samuel.

Stand back thou manifest conspirator;
Thou that contriv'st to murder our dread lord,

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

But let the bold conspirator beware;
For heav'n makes princes its peculiar care.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

One put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy against him, together with all the names of the conspirators. South.

Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

They took great indignation, and conspired against the king. Apocrypha.

Let the air be excluded; for that undermineth
the body, and conspireth with the spirit of the body to dissolve it. Bacon.

There is in man a natural possibility to destroy the world; that is, to conspire to know no woman.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The press, the pulpit, and the stage,
Conspire to censure and expose our age.

Roscommon.

2. To agree together: as, all things conspire to make him happy.

So moist and dry when Phœbus shines, Conspiring give the plant to grow. Heigh.

CONSPI'RER. n. f. [from conspire.] A conspirator; a plotter.

Take no care,
Who chafes, who frets, and where conspirers are;
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CONSPI'RING Powers. [In mechanics.] All such as act in direction not opposite to one another.

Harris.

CONSPUR'CATION. n. f. [from conspuro, Latin.]
The act of defiling; defilement; pollution.

CONSTABLE. n. f. [from comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blasfemy of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary 'till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferior constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables, because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferior authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places: as, constable of the Tower, of Dover castle, of the castle of

CON

Carnarvon; but these are properly castellani, or governours of castles.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shakespeare.

The knave constable had set me i' th' stocks, i'
th' common stocks, for a witch.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The constable being a sober man, and an enemy to sedition, went to observe what they did.

Clarendon.

2. To over-run, the CONSTABLE. [Perhaps from conte stable, Fr. the settled, firm, and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth: a low phrase.

CON'STABLESHIP. n. f. [from constable.] The office of a constable.

The keepership is annexed to the constableship of the castle, and that granted out in lease.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CONSTANCY. n. f. [from constantia, Latin.]
1. Immutability; perpetuity; unalterable continuance.

The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker.

2. Constistency; unvaried state.

Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance.

Ray on the Creation.

3. Resolution; firmness; steadiness; unshaken determination.

In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,
Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat;
In vain the fyers sing, the tempests beat. Prior.

4. Lasting affection; continuance of love, or friendship.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship, as overlooks and passes by lesser failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.

5. Certainty; veracity; reality.

But all the story of the night told o'er,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, however, strange and admirable. Shakesp.

CONSTANT. adj. [from constans, Latin.]
1. Firm; fixed; not fluid.

If you take highly rectified spirits of wine, and dephlegmed spirit of urine, and mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body. Boyle's History of Firmness.

2. Unvaried; unchanged; immutable; durable.

The world's a scene of changes, and to be constant, in nature were inconstancy. Corwell.

3. Firm; resolute; determined; immoveable;
unshaken.

Some shrewd contents
Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

4. Free from change of affection.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained

5. Certain; not various; steady; firmly adherent: with to.

Now, through the land, his care of souls he stretch'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd;
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all.

Dryden.

He shewed his firm adherence to religion as modelled by our national constitution, and was constant to its offices in devotion, both in publick and in his family. Addison's Freeholder.

CONSTANTLY. adv. [from constant.] Unvaria-bly; perpetually; certainly; steadily.

It is strange that the fathers should never appeal; nay, that they should not constantly do it.

Tillotson.

TO CONSTE'LLATE. v. n. [from constellatus, Latin.]
To join lustre; to shine with one general light.

The several things which engage our affections,
do,

do, in a transcendent manner, shine forth and con- stellate in God. Boyle.

To CONSTELLATE. v. a. To unite several shining bodies in one splendour.

Great constitutions, and such as are constellated into knowledge, do nothing till they outdo all.

These scattered perfections, which were divided among the several ranks of inferior natures, were summed up and constellated in ours.

CONSTELLATION. n. f. [from constellate.]
1. A cluster of fixed stars.

For the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, shall not give their light. If. xiii. 10.

The earth, the air refounded,
The heav'ns and all the constellations rung.

A constellation is but one;
Though 'tis a train of stars. Dryden.

2. An assemblage of splendours, or excellencies.

The condition is a constellation or conjuncture of all those gospel-graces, faith, hope, charity, self-denial, repentance, and the rest.

CONSTERNATION. n. f. [from consterno, Latin.] Astonishment; amazement; alienation of mind by a surprise; surprize; wonder.

They find the same holy consternation upon themselves that Jacob did at Bethel, which he called the gate of heaven. South.

The natives, dubious whom
They must obey, in consternation wait,
'Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege.

To CONSTIPATE. v. a. [from constipare, Lat.]

1. To crowd together into a narrow room; to thicken; to condense.

Of cold, the property is to condense and consti- pate.

It may, by amassing, cooling, and constipating of waters, turn them into rain. Ray on the Creation.

There might arise some vertiginous motions or whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms might be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there constipate one another into great solid globes. Bentley.

2. To stuff up, or stop by filling up the passages.

It is not probable that any aliment should have the quality of entirely constipating or shutting up the capillary vessels. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. To bind the belly; or make cotive.
Omitting honey which is laxative and the powder of some loadstones in this, doth rather constipate and bind, than purge and loosen the belly.

CONSTIPATION. n. f. [from constipare.]
1. The act of crowding any thing into less room; condensation.

This worketh by the detention of the spirits, and constipation of the tangible parts.

It requires either absolute fulness of matter, or a pretty close constipation and mutual contact of its particles. Bentley.

2. Stoppage; obstruction by plenitude.
The inactivity of the gall occasions a constipation of the belly. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. The state of having the body bound.

CONSTITUENT. adj. [from constituens, Latin.] That which makes any thing what it is; necessary to existence; elemental; essential; that of which any thing consists.

Body, soul, and reason, are the three parts necessarily constituent of a man. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

All animals derived all the constituent matter of their bodies, successively, in all ages, out of this fund. Woodward.

It is impossible that the figures and sizes of its constituent particles, should be so justly adapted as to touch one another in every point. Bentley's Serms.

CONSTITUENT. n. f.
1. The person or thing which constitutes or settles any thing in its peculiar state,

Their first composition and origination requires an higher and nobler constituent than chance.

2. That which is necessary to the subsistence of any thing.

The obstruction of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment.

3. He that deposes another; as, the representatives in parliament disregard their constituents.

To CONSTITUTE. v. a. [from constituo, Latin.]

establishing; producing.

2. State of being; particular texture of parts;
natural qualities.

This is more beneficial than any other constitution.

This light being trajected through the parallel prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other: and so, being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same condition as at first. Newton's Opticks.

3. Corporeal frame.

Amongst many bad effects of this oily constitution,
there is one advantage; such who arrive to age,
are not subject to stricture of fibres. Arb. on Alim.

4. Temper of body, with respect to health or disease.

If such men happen, by their native constituti- ons, to fall into the gout, either they mind it not at all, having no leisure to be sick, or they use it like a dog. Temple.

Beauty is nothing else but a just accord and harmony of the members, animated by a healthful constitution.

5. Temper of mind.

Dametas, according to the constitution of a dull head, thinks no better way to shew himself wife than by suspecting every thing in his way. Sydney.

Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world

Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man.

He defended himself with undaunted courage, and less passion than was expected from his consti- tution. Clarendon.

6. Established form of government; system of laws and customs.

The Norman conqu'ring all by might,
Mixing our customs, and the form of right,
With foreign constitutions he had brought. Daniel.

7. Particular law; established usage; establishment; institution.

We lawfully may observe the positive constituti- ons of our own churches. Hoecker.

Constitution, properly speaking in the sense of the civil law, is that law which is made and ordained by some king or emperor; yet the canonists, by adding the word sacred to it, make it to signify the same as an ecclesiastical canon. Wyliffe.

CONSTITUTIONAL. adj. [from constitution.]

1. Bred in the constitution; radical.

It is not probable any constitutional illness will be communicated with the small-pox by inoculation.

2. Consistent with the civil constitution; legal.

CONSTITUTIVE. adj. [from constituo.]

1. That which constitutes any thing what it is;
elemental; essential; productive.

The Tyrian hugs and fondles thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains;
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins.

6. To constringe.
When winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The scanty root can take no steady hold. Dryden.

7. To tie, to bind.
Scarce the weary god had clos'd his eyes,
When rushing on with shouts, he binds in chains
The drowsy prophet, and his limbs constrains. Dry-

8. To imprison.
Constrain d him in a bird, and made him fly
With party-colour'd plumes a chattering pye.

9. To force; to produce in opposition to nature.

In this northern tract our hoarser throats
Utter unripe and ill constrained notes. Waller.

10. To restrain; to withhold.
The soft weapons of paternal persuasions, after, mankind began to forget the original giver of life became over-weak to resist the first inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to con- strain it. Raleigh.

CONSTRINABLE. adj. [from constringere.] Liable to constraint; obnoxious to compulsion.

Whereas men before stood bound in conscience to do as reason teacheth, they are now, by virtue of human law, constrainable; and if they outwardly transgress, punishable. Hoecker.

CONSTRAINEDLY. adv. [from constringere.] By constraint; by compulsion.

What occasion it had given them to think to their greater obduration in evil, that through a froward and wanton desire of innovation we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended. Hoecker.

CONSTRAINER. n. f. [from constringere.] He that

CONTRAREGULARITY. n. f. [from contra and regularity.] Contrariety to rule.

It is not only its not promoting, but its opposing, or at least its natural aptness to oppose the greatest and best of ends; so that it is not so properly an irregularity as a contraregularity.

CONTRARIANT. adj. [from contrarius, from contrarius, French.] Inconsistent; contradictory: a term of law.

The very depositions of witnesses themselves, being false, various, contrariant, single, inconcludent. Ayliffe's Paragon.

CONTRARIES. n. f. [from contrary.] In logic, propositions which destroy each other; but of which the falsehood of one does not establish the truth of the other.

If two universals differ in quality, they are contraries; as, every wine is a tree, no wine is a tree. These can never be both true together, but they may be both false. Watson's Logic.

CONTRARIETY. n. f. [from contrarietas, Lat.]

1. Repugnance; opposition.

The will about one and the same thing may, in contrary respects, have contrary inclinations, and that without contrariety. Hooker.

Making a contrariety the place of my memory, in her foulness I beheld Pamela's fairness, still looking on Mopsa, but thinking on Pamela. Sidney.

He which will perfectly recover a sick, and restore a diseased body unto health, must not endeavour so much to bring it to a state of simple contrariety, as of fit proportion in contrariety unto those evils which are to be cured. Hooker.

It principally failed by late setting out, and by some contrariety of weather at sea. Watson.

There religion had more than negative contrariety to virtue. Decay of Piety.

There is a contrariety between those things that conscience inclines to, and those that entertain the senses. South.

These two interests, it is to be feared, cannot be divided; but they will also prove opposite, and not resting in a bare diversity, quickly rise into a contrariety. South.

There is nothing more common than contrariety of opinions; nothing more obvious than that one man wholly disbelieves what another only doubts of, and a third steadfastly believes and firmly adheres to. Locke.

2. In-

2. Inconsistency; quality or position destructive of its opposite.

He will be here, and yet he is not here;
How can these contraries agree?

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CONTRISTATION, n. f. [from contristate.] The act of making sad; the state of being made sad; sorrow; heaviness of heart; sadness; sorrowfulness; gloominess; grief; moan; mournfulness; trouble; discontent; melancholy. Not used.

Incense and odorous smells, such as were of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of sadness and contristation of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them.

Bacon's Natural History.

CONTRITE, adj. [contritus, Latin.]

1. Bruised; much worn.

2. Worn with sorrow; harrassed with the sense of guilt; penitent. In the books of divines contrite is sorrowful for sin, from the love of God and desire of pleasing him; and attrite is sorrowful for sin, from the fear of punishment.

I Richard's body have interr'd now;
And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears,
Than from it issu'd forced drops of blood.

Shaksp. Henry V.

With tears

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek.

Milton.

The contrite sinner is restor'd to pardon, and, through faith in Christ, our repentance is invited to salvation.

Rogers.

CONTRITENESS, n. f. [from contrite.] Contrition; repentance.

DiG.

CONTRITION, n. f. [from contrite.]

1. The act of grinding; or rubbing to powder. Some of those coloured powders, which painters use, may have these colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground; where I see not what can be justly pretended for these changes, besides the breaking of their parts into less parts by that contrition.

Newton's Opticks.

2. Penitence; sorrow for sin: in the strict sense

Pen, the sorrow which arises from the desire to please God, distinguished from attrition, or imperfect repentance produced by dread of hell.

What is sorrow and contrition for sin? A being grieved with the conscience of sin, not only that we have thereby incurred such danger, but also that we have so unkindly grieved and provoked to good a God.

Hammond's Pract. Cat.

Fruits of more pleasing favour, from the seed sown with contrition in his heart, than those which, his own manuring, all the trees of paradise could have produced.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Your fasting, contrition, and mortification, when the church and state appoints, and that especially in times of greater riot and luxury.

Spratt's Sermons.

My future days shall be one whole contrition;
A chapel will I build with large endowment,
Where every day an hundred aged men
Shall all hold up their wither'd hands to heav'n.

Dryden.

CONTRIVABLE. adj. [from contrive.] Possible to be planned by the mind; possible to be invented and adjusted.

The close contriver of all harms,

Was never call'd to bear my part. Shak. Macb.

Epeus, who the fraud's contriver was. Denham.

Plain loyalty, not built on hope,

I leave to your contriver, Pope:

None loves his king and country better,

Yet none was ever less their debtor. Swift.

Scenes of blood and desolation, I had painted as the common effects of those destructive machines; whereof, he said, some evil genius, enemy to mankind, must have been the first contriver.

Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

CONTROL. n. f. [from controlle, that is, contre rele, French.]

1. A register or account kept by another officer, that each may be examined by the other.

2. Check; restraint.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may,
Without control, upon their fellows prey. Waller.

He shall feel a force upon himself from within,
and from the control of his own principles, to engage him to do worthily. South.

If the sinner shall win so complete a victory over his conscience, that all those considerations shall be able to strike no terror into his mind, lay no restraint upon his lusts, no control upon his appetites, he is certainly too strong for the means of grace. South's Sermons.

Speak, what Phœbus has inspir'd thy soul
For common good, and speak without control.

Dryden's Homer.

3. Power; authority; superintendence.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,

2. Capable of being evidently disproved, or detected.

Upon what uncertainties, and also convincible falsities, they often erected such emblems, we have delivered.

Brown.

CONVINCEINGLY. adv. [from convince.] In such a manner as to leave no room for doubt or dispute; so as to produce conviction.

This he did so particularly and convincingly, that those of the parliament were in great confusion.

Clarendon.

The resurrection is so convincingly attested by such persons, with such circumstances, that they who consider and weigh the testimony, at what distance soever they are placed, cannot entertain any more doubt of the resurrection than the crucifixion of Jesus.

Asterbury.

CONVINCEINGNESS. n. f. [from convincing.] The power of convincing.

To CONVIVE. v. a. [convivio, Lat.] To entertain; to feast. A word, I believe, not elsewhere used.

First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent,

There in the full convive you.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

CONVIVIAL. } adj. [convivialis, Lat.] Relating to an entertainment; festive;

CONVIVIAL. } social.

I was the first who set up festivals;

Not with high tastes our appetites did force,

But fill'd with conversation and discourse;

Which feasts, convivial meetings we did name.

Denham.

Your social and convivial spirit is such that it is a happiness to live and converse with you.

Dr. Newton.

CONVIVIRUM. n. f. A low jest; a quibble; a mean conceit; a cant word.

Mean time he smokes, and laughs at merry tale, Or pun ambiguous, or convivirum quaint.

Philips.

To CO'NVOCATE. v. a. [convoco, Lat.] To call together; to summon to an assembly.

CONVOCA'TION. n. f. [convocatio, Lat.]

1. The act of calling to an assembly.

Diaphantus making a general convocation, spake to them in this manner.

Sidney.

2. An assembly.

On the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you.

Lev. xxiii. 20.

3. An assembly of the clergy for consultation upon matters ecclesiastical, in time of parliament; and as the parliament consists of two distinct houses, so does this; the one called the upper house, where the archbishops and bishops sit severally by themselves; the other the lower house, where all the rest of the clergy are represented by their deputies.

Cowel.

I have made an offer to his majesty, Upon our spiritual convocation,

As touching France, to give a greater sum Than ever at one time the clergy yet

Did to his predecessors part withal.

Shakespeare.

This is the declaration of our church about it, made by those who met in convocation.

Stillingfleet.

To CONVO'KE. v. a. [convoco, Latin.] To call together; to summon to an assembly.

Assemblies exercise their legislature at the times that their constitution, or their own adjournment appoints, if there be no other way prescribed to convoke them.

Locke.

When next the morning warms the purple East, Convokes the peerage.

Pope's Odyssey.

The senate originally consisted of all nobles, the people being only convoked upon such occasions as fell into their cognizance.

Swift.

To CONVOL'VE. v. a. [convolve, Latin.] To roll together; to roll one part upon another.

He writh'd him to and fro' convolv'd.

Milton.

It is a wonderful artifice how newly hatch'd maggots, not the parent animal, because she emits no web, nor hath any textrine art, can convolve the stubborn leaf, and bind it with the thread it weaves from its body.

Denham.

Us'd to milder scents, the tender race By thousands tumble from their honey'd domes, Convolved and agonizing in the dust.

Thomson's Autumn.

CO'NVOLUTED. part. [of the verb I have found no example.] Twisted; rolled upon itself.

This differs from Muscovy-glass only in this, that the plates of that are flat and plain, whereas these are convoluted and inflected.

Woodward on Fossils.

CONVOL'UTION. n. f. [convolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of rolling any thing upon itself; the state of being rolled upon itself.

Observe the convolution of the said fibres in all other glands, in the same or some other manner.

Grew's Colours.

A thousand secret, subtle pipes bestow, From which, by num'rous convolutions wound, Wrapp'd with th' attending nerve, and twisted round.

Blackmore.

2. The state of rolling together in company.

And tofs'd wide round,

O'er the calm sea, in convolution swift The feather'd eddy floats.

Thomson's Autumn.

To CONVOY. v. a. [convoyer, Fr. from convoyare, low Latin.] To accompany by land or sea for the sake of defence: as, he was convoyed by ships of war.

CO'NVOY. n. f. [from the verb. Anciently the accent was on the last syllable: it is now on the first.]

1. One attending on the road by way of defence.

Had not God set peculiar value upon his temple, he would not have made himself his people's convoy to secure them in their passage to it.

South's Sermons.

My soul grows hard, and cannot death endure, Your convoy makes the dangerous way secure.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Convoy ships accompany their merchants till they may prosecute the voyage without danger.

Dryden's Pref. Dufresnoy.

2. The act of attending as a defence.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where services were done; at such a breach, at such a convoy.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Swift.

Swift, as a sparkle of a glancing star,
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convey.
Milton's Paradise Regained.

3. Conveyance. Not now in use.
Sifter, as the winds give benefit,
And convey is assitant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you. Shakespeare.

CO'NUSANCE. n. f. [connaissance, French.] Cognizance; notice; knowledge; a law term.
To CONVUL'SE. v. a. [convulsus, Latin.] To give an irregular and involuntary motion to the parts of any body.

Follows the loofen'd, aggravated roar,
Enlarging, deepening, mingling, peal on peal,
Crush'd horrible, convulsing heaven and earth. Thomson.

CONVULSION. n. f. [convulsio, Latin.]
1. A convulsion is an involuntary contraction of the fibres and muscles, whereby the body and limbs are preternaturally distorted. Quincy.

If my hand be put into motion by a convulsion, the indifferency of that operative faculty is taken away. Locke.

2. Any irregular and violent motion; tumult; commotion; disturbance.

All have been subject to some convulsions, and fall under the same convulsions of state, by dissensions or invasions. Temple.

CONVULSIVE. adj. [convulsif, French.] That which produces involuntary motion; that which gives twitches or spasms.

They are irregular and convulsive motions, or strugglings of the spirits. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Shew me the flying foul's convulsive strife,
And all the anguish of departing life. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Her colour chang'd, her face was not the same,
And hollow groans from her deep spirit came:
Her hair stood up; convulsive rage possess'd
Her trembling limbs, and heav'd her lab'ring breast. Dryden.

In silence weep,
And thy convulsive sorrows inward keep. Prior.
CONY. n. f. [kanin, Germ. canol, or conin, Fr. cuniculus, Lat.] A rabbit; an animal that burrows under ground.

With a short-legg'd hen,
Lemons and wine for sauce; to these a cony
Is not to be despair'd of, for our money. Ben Jonson's Epig.

The husbandman suffers by hares and conys, which eat the corn-trees. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CONY-BOROUGH. n. f. A place where rabbits make their holes in the ground.

To CONY-CATCH. v. n. To catch a cony, is, in the old cant of thieves, to cheat; to bite; to trick.

I have matter in my head against you, and against your cony-catching rascals.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
CONY-CATCHER. n. f. A thief; a cheat; a sharper; a tricking fellow; a rascal. Now obsolete.

To COO. v. n. [from the found.] To cry as a dove or pigeon.

The stock-dove only through the forest coos, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson's Summer.

COOK. n. f. [coquus, Latin.] One whose profession is to dress and prepare victuals for the table.

One mistress Quickly, is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry-nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
The new-born babe, by nurses overlaid,
And the cook caught within the raging fire he made. Dryden.

Their cooks could make artificial birds and fishes, in default of the real ones, and which exceeded them in the exquisiteness of the taste. Arbutnot on Coins.

COOK-MAID. n. f. [cook and maid.] A maid that dresses provisions.

A friend was complaining to me, that his wife had turned off one of the best cook-maids in England. Addison.

COOK-ROOM. n. f. [cook and room.] A room in which provisions are prepared for the ship's crew. The kitchen of a ship.

The commodity of this new cook-room, the merchants having found to be so great, as that in all their ships the cook-rooms are built in their fore-castles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essays.

To COOK. v. a. [coquo, Latin.]

1. To prepare victuals for the table.
Had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes. Decay of Piety.

2. To prepare for any purpose.
Hanging is the word, Sir; if you be ready for that, you are well cook'd. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

COO'KERY. n. f. [from cook.] The art of dressing victuals.

Some man's wit
Found th' art of cook'ry to delight his sense:
More bodies are consum'd and kill'd with it,
Than with the sword, famine, or pestilence. Davies.

Ev'ry one to cookery pretends. King's Cookery.
These are the ingredients of plants before they are prepar'd by cookery. Arbutnot on Aliments.

COOL. adj. [koelen, Dutch.]

1. Somewhat cold; approaching to cold.
He fet his leg in a pale-full, as hot as he could well endure it, renewing it as it grew cool. Temple.

2. Not zealous; not ardent; not angry; not fond; without passion: as, a cool friend; a cool deceiver.

COOL. n. f. Freedom from heat; soft and refreshing coldness.

But see, where Lucia, at her wonted hour,
Amid th' cool of yon high marble arch,
Enjoys the noon-day breeze. Addison's Cato.

Philander was enjoying the cool of the morning, among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air a freshness. Addison on Medals.

To COOL. v. a. [koelen, Dutch.]

1. To make cool; to allay heat.
Snow they use in Naples instead of ice, because, as they say, it cools or congeals any liquor sooner. Addison on Italy.

Jelly of currants, or the jelly of any ripe sub-acid fruit, is cooling, and very agreeable to the stomach. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To quiet passion; to calm anger; to moderate zeal.

My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He will keep his jealousy to himself, and repine in private, because he will be apt to fear some ill effect it may produce in cooling your love to him. Addison's Spectator.

Had they thought they had been fighting only other people's quarrels, perhaps it might have cool'd their zeal. Swift.

To COOL. v. n.

1. To grow less hot.

2. To grow less warm with regard to passion or inclination.

My humour shall not cool; I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness. Shakespeare.

You never cool while you read Homer. Dryden.
I'm impatient 'till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

COOLER. n. f. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.

Coolers are of two sorts; first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and, secondly, such as, by particular viscosity, or grossness of parts, give a greater consistency to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing viscosity. Quincy.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler as in man. Harvey on Consumptions.
Acid things were used only as coolers. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool.

Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the fullage behind, and let it run off fine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'OLY. adv. [from cool.]

1. Without heat; or sharp cold.
She in the gelid caverns, woodbine wrought,
And fresh bedew'd with ever-spouting streams, Sits coolly calm. Thomson's Summer.

2. Without passion.

Motives that address themselves coolly to our reason, are fittest to be employed upon reasonable creatures. Atterbury.

CO'OLNESS. n. f. [from cool.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.

This difference consisteth not in the heat or coolness of spirits; for cloves, and other spices, naphtha and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not inflamed. Bacon's Natural History.

The toad loveth shade and coolness. Bacon's Natural History.

Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up,
Gives a fresh coolness to the royal cup:

There ice, like crystal, firm and never lost,
Tempers hot July with December's frost. Wal.

The sheep enjoy the coolness of the shade. Dryden's Virgil.

2. Want of affection; disinclination.

They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again. Clarendon.

3. Freedom from passion.

COOM. n. f. [ecume, French.]

1. Soot that gathers over an oven's mouth. Pbil.

2. That matter that works out of the wheels of carriages. Bailey.

3. It is used in Scotland for the useless dunt which falls from large coals.

COOMB, or COMB. n. f. [comble, Fr. cumulus, Lat. a heap, Skinner.] A measure of corn containing four bushels. Bailey.

COOP. n. f. [kuype, Dutch.]

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquids.

2. A cage; a penn for animals; as poultry or sheep.

Gracchus was slain, the day the chickens refused to eat of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripudiary augurations. Brewer.

There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop. L'Estrange.

To COOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison: when it is used absolutely, it has often, perhaps always, the intensive particle up.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders. Shakespeare's King John.

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravenstein, that he stirr'd not; and likewise held in strait siege the town. Bacon.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and coop'd up. L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown,
Coop'd up a second time within your town!

Who dare not issue forth in open field. Dryden's Æneid.

One world suffic'd not Alexander's mind;
Coop'd up, he seem'd in earth and seas confin'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

Coop'd in a narrow isle, observing dreams
With flatt'ring wizards. Dryden's Juvenal.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,
Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng. Dryden.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Locke.

They are cooped in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant. Locke.

What; coop whole armies in our walls again? Pope.

COOPER. n. f. [coûper, French.] A motion in dancing.

A COOPER. n. f. [from coop.] One that makes coops or barrels.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction. Child.

COOPERAGE. n. f. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.

TO COOPERATE. v. n. [con and opera, Latin.]

1. To labour jointly with another to the same end: it has with before the agent, and to before the end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends. Bacon.

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity. Boyle.

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All these causes cooperating, must, at last, weaken their motion. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

The special acts and impression by which the Divine spirit introduces this charge, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our comprehension. Rogers.

COOPERATION. n. f. [from cooperate.] The act of contributing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not helped by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

COOPERATIVE. adj. [from cooperate.] Promoting the same end jointly.

COOPERATOR. n. f. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COOPTATION. n. f. [coopto, Latin.] Adoption; assumption.

COORDINATE. adj. [con and ordinatus, Lat.] Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shell-fish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connexions, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts.

COORDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.] In the same rank; in the same relation; without subordination.

COORDINATENESS. n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.

COORDINATION. n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateral-acts.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Howell's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

When these petty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lyfidius has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

COOT. n. f. [mac-koot, Dut. côte, French.] A small black water-fowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

A lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden's Fables.

COP. n. f. [kop, Dut. cop, Saxon.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing rising to a head. As a cop, vulgarly cock of hay; a cop-castle, properly cop-castle, a small castle or house on a hill. A cop of cherrystones for cop, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

CO'PAL. n. f. The Mexican term for a gum.

COPARCENARY. n. f. [from coparcener.] Joint succession to any inheritance.

In descent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of sons the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter. Hall's History of Common Law.

COPARCENER. n. f. [from con and particeps, Latin.]

Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and, in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of the ancestor. Cowell.

This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters, in every of these portions, the coparcener severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used, in the whole province. Davies on Ireland.

COPARCENY. n. f. An equal share of coparceners. Philips's World of Words.

COPARTNER. n. f. [co and partner.] One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partaker; a partner. Milton has used it both with of and in.

Our faithful friends,
Th' associates and copartners of our loss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake Full happiness with me? Or rather not;
But keeps the odds of knowledge in my pow'r,
Without copartner? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Rather by them
I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell
Copartner in these regions of the world. Milton's Paradise Regained.

COPARTNERSHIP. n. f. [from copartner.] The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership. Hale.

COPATAIN. adj. [from cop.] High raised; pointed. Hommer.

Oh, fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloke, and a copatain hat. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

COPAYVA. n. f. [It is sometimes written copivi, copivi, copayva, copayva, copayva, copayva.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brazil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE. n. f. [See COP.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.

2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacerdotal ministration.

3. Any thing which is spread over the head; as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contained Within this goodly cope, both most and least,
Their being have, and daily are increast. Spenser.

Over head the dismal hiss,
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;
And, flying, vaulted either host with fire;
So, under fiery cope, together rush'd
Both battles main. Milton's Par. Lost.

The scholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is so knowing as his master. Dryden.

TO COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.

A very large bridge, that is all made of wood and coped over head. Addison on Italy.

2. To contend with; to oppose.

Know my name is lost;
By treason's tooth baregawn'd, and canker bit;
Yet I am noble as the adversary I come to cope. Shaksp. King Lear.

3. To reward; to give in return.
I and my friend

Have, by your wisdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shakespeare.

TO COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to struggle; to strive. It has with before the thing or person opposed. [In this sense it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from coopen, to buy, or some other word of the same import; so that to cope with signifies to interchange blows, or any thing else with another.]

Let our trains
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal. Shak. Henry IV.

It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing, like death, to chide away this shame,
That copeth with death itself, to 'scape from it. Shakespeare.

But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd
And rash, beforehand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with, or his own. Milton.

They perfectly understood both the hares and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Esfrange.

On every plain,
Host cop'd with host, dire was the din of war. Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted. Addison's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itself first to easier subjects, and things near a-kin to what is already known:
and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by slow degrees, it will be able,
in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and to prevail over them with amazing and happy success. Watts on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindness or sentiments.

Thou fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know
The royal fool thou cop'st with. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Thou art e'en as just a man,
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal. Shaksp. Hamlet.

TO COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not in use.

I will make him tell the tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when He hath, and is again to cope your wife. Shaksp. Othello.

COPESMATE. n. f. [perhaps for copmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the same cope, for house.] Companion; friend. An old word.

Ne ever staid in place, ne spake to wight,
'Till that the fox his copemate he had found. Hubbard's Tale.

COPIER. n. f. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a transcriber.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison on Coins.

2. One that imitates; a plagiarist; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiarist of others. Dryden's DuRoi.

Let the faint copier, on old Tiber's shore,
Nor mean the task, each breathing best explore;
Line after line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace. Tatler.

COPING. n. f. [from cope.] The upper tier of masonry which covers the wall.

All these were of costly stones, even from the foundation unto the coping. 1 Kings, vii. 9.

The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble shew by their graceful projections. Addison's Freeholder.

CO-

COPIOUS. adj. [copia, Latin.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Rose, as in dance the stately trees, and spread
Their branches hung with copious fruit. Milton.

Full measure only bounds

Excess, before the all-bounteous king, who show'd

With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy. Milton.

This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious use of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbutnot on Aliments.

The tender heart is peace,

And kindly pours its copious treasures forth

In various converse. Thomson's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men! thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my song
Henceforth, and never shall my harp thy praise
Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin. Milton.

COPIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.

2. At large; without brevity or conciseness; diffusely.

These several remains have been so copiously described by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new discoveries on so beaten a subject. Addison.

COPIOUSNESS. n. f. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.

2. Diffusion; exuberance of style.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiousness of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his business to reach the conciseness of Demosthenes. Dryden.

COPIST. n. f. [from copy.] A copyer; a transcriber; an imitator.

COPLAND. n. f. A piece of ground in which the land terminates with an acute angle. Dier.

COPPED. adj. [from cop.] Rising to a top or head.

It was broad in its basis, and rose copped like a sugar-loaf. Wijeman's Surgery.

A galeated echinus being copped and somewhat conic. Woodward.

COPPEL. n. f. [This word is variously spelt; as copel, cupel, cuples, and cupple; but I cannot find its etymology.] An instrument used in chymistry in the form of a dish, made of ashes, well washed to cleanse them from all their salt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its use is to try and purify gold and silver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and exposing it in the coppe to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in dross, which is called the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the coppe a test. Harris.

COPPER. n. f. [kupr, Dut. cuprum, Latin.] One of the six primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal, after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and statues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than silver, lead, and gold. Hill on Fossils.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Ezra, viii. 27.

COPPER. n. f. A vessel made of copper; commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half: then they poured it into earthen vessels. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

COPPER-NOSE. n. f. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose. Shakespeare.

Gutta rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being scratched, looks red, and rise in great welks, rendering the visage fiery; and, makes copper-noses, as we generally express them. Wijeman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. f. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impression; distinguished from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. f. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

COPPERAS. n. f. [kopperroose, Dut. couperouse, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the sea-shore in Essex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. This fictitious copperas, in many respects, agrees with the native green vitriol. Chambers, Hill.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after conversion. Brown.

COPPERSMITH. n. f. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmones, as the Grecian tale is,

Was a mad copper-smith of Elis;

Up at his forge by morning-peep. Swift.

COPPERWORM. n. f. [teredo, in Latin.]

1. A little worm in ships.

2. A moth that fretteth garments.

3. A worm breeding in one's hand. Ainsworth.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of iron, put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward on Fossils.

COPPICE. n. f. [coupeaux, Fr. from copier, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] Low woods cut at stated times for fuel; a place over-run with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and coppes of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,

A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot. Shakespeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave saddles too thick, they run to brush and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon.

The willows and the hazel coppes green,

Shall now no more be seen,

Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays. Milton.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coal-mines. Locke.

COPPLE-DUST. n. f. [probably for coppe, or cupel-dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may also be tried by incorporating powder of steel, or coppe-dust, by pouncing into the quick-silver. Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

COPPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppelled. Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. f. [abbreviated from coppice.] Short wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The East quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd, Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay, His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden's Fables.

To COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preferre underwoods.

The neglect of copping wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence.

COPULA. n. f. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition; as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts's Logick.

To COPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

To COPULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children. Wijeman's Surgery.

COPULATION. n. f. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unchaste. Hooker.

COPULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions; as riches and honours are temptations to pride: Cæsar conquered the Gauls and the Britons: neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts's Logick.

COPY. n. f. [copie, Fr. copia, low Latin.] Quod cupiam facta est copia exerbendi. Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from win, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Denham.

He slept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for the copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference;
In bed he slept not, for my urging it;
At board he fed not, for my urging it. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives.—
But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. f. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. f. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to show but the copy.

copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence. This is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and some certain; that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it: that which is certain is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary: because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder: for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annuity, and vasium, as in case of freehold: Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and they committing felony, their land escheats to the lord of the manor. Cowel.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addison.

COPY-HOLDER. n. f. [from copyhold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

TO COPY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original: it has sometimes out, a kind of pleonasm.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame,
To copy out their great forefathers fame.

Dryden's King Arthur.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,
Her virtues fewer swains admir'd. Swift.

TO COPY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master, who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad, as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addison's Spectator.

TO COQUET. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderness.

You are coqueting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to see how the gamesters play, and I railing at you both. Swift.

TO COQUET. v. n. To act the lover, to entice by blandishments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was marry'd to the Tunbridge beau,
I saw coqueting t'other night,
In publick with that odious knight. Swift.

COQUETRY. n. f. [coqueterie, French.] Affectation of amorous advances; desirous of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addison's Spectator.

COQUETTE. n. f. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquette in sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of air. Pope.

A coquette and a tinder-box are sparkled.

Arbutnot and Pope.

CO'RACLE. n. f. [cawricle, Welsh, probably from corium, leather, Latin.] A boat used in Wales by fishers; made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CORAL. n. f. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of a great hardness and stony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion that coral is soft, while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is plucked up for use. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller. It grows to stones without a root, or without any way penetrating them, but as it is found to grow, and take its nourishment in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom.

Hill's Materia Medica.

In the sea, upon the south-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant: it hath no leaves: it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see.

Bacon's Natural History.

This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He hears the crackling found of coral woods,
And sees the secret source of subterranean floods.

Dryden's Virgil.

A turret was inclos'd

Within the wall of alabaster white,
And crimson coral, for the queen of night,
Who takes in Sylvan sports her chaste delight. Dryden.

Or where's the sense, direct or moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral? Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;
The bells she gingles, and the whistle blew. Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. f. [corallodendron, Latin.]

It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens. Miller.

CORALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral.

At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terrestrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes calm. Woodward.

CORALLINE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

Coralline is a sea-plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness, sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often reddish, and frequently white.

Hill.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owfe.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CORALLOID. } adv. [καρραλλοειδής.] Refem-

CORALLOIDAL. } bling coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experienced in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are composed of plates, set lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it.

Woodward on Fossils.

CORANT. n. f. [courant, French.] A lofty sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well, than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin. Walsh.

CO'REAN. n. f. [קרנן.] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the Gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were deposited. Calmat.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, French.] Crooked.

For liker thy head very tottie is,
So thy corbe shoulder it leans amifs. Spenser's Past.

CO'REELS. n. f. Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

CO'REEL. n. f. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

CO'REEL. } n. f.

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semi-girders of a platform.

2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues. Chambers.

CORD. n. f. [cort, Welsh; chorda, Latin; corde, French.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twists.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Jos. ii. 5.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread,
These num'rous cords are through the body spread. Blackmore.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. Isaiah xxxiii. 20.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. f. [cord and make.] One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORD-WOOD. n. f. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

TO CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to close by a bandage.

COR'DAGE. n. f. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

Our cordage from her store, and cables should be made,

Of any in that kind most fit for marine trade. Dryden.

They fastened their ships, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage. Raleigh.

Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping.

Arbutnot on Coats.

CORDED.

Co'RD'ED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.
This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder,
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber-window.

Shakespeare.
CoRDELI'ER. n. f. A Franciscan friar; so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.
And who to assist but a grave cord-lier. Prior.

Co'RDIAL. n. f. [from cor, the heart, Lat.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the properest condition for circulation and nutrition;
as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.
3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body shall have shortly ease;
But such sweet cordials pain physicians art.

Spenser.
Cordials of pity give me new
For I too weak for purges grew. Cowley.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,
The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown,
Are the most pleasing objects I can find,
Charms to my fight, and cordials to my mind.

Dryden.

Co'RDIAL. adj.
1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

He only took cordial waters, in which we infused sometimes purgatives. Wise man's Surgery.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart;
without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among Christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial super-funding of Christian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

He with looks of cordial love,
Hung over her enamour'd. Milton.

CoRDIALITY. n. f. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart.
That the ancients had any such respects of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

Co'RDIALLY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely;
heartily; without hypocrisy.
Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument or demonstration, no nor miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with and receive it.

South's Sermons.
Co'RDINER. n. f. [from cordier, French.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statutes.

CoRDON. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet. Chambers.

Co'RDWAIN. n. f. [from cordu, leather, from Cordova in Spain.] Spanish leather.

Her straight legs most bravely were embay'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

CoRDWA'NER. n. f. [Uncertain whether from Cordovan, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made, and are now used in the Spanish West Indies. Trewax.] A shoemaker.

CoRE. n. f. [from cor, French; cor, Latin.]

1. The heart.
Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square she raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.
Dig out the cores below the surface.

Mortimer's Husbandry.
They wasteful eat,
Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.

Thomson.
3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees, watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.

Launce the fore,
And cut the head; for, 'till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.

Dryden's Virgil.
5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection;
[from corps, Fr. pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself; for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CoRIA'CEOUS. adj. [from coriaceus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceous concretions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CoRIA'NDER. n. f. [from coriandrum, Latin.] A plant.

The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2. Smaller testiculated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second fort is seldom found. Miller.

Israel called the name thereof manna; and it was, like coriander seed, white. Exod. xiii. 31.

CoRINTH. n. f. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit commonly called currant.

Now will the Corinths, now the rasps supply Delicious draughts. Philips.

The chief riches of Zant consisteth in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities.

Broome.
CoRINTHIAN Order, is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her play-things had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches encompassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Villalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree.
The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian Order, adorned with fruit and flowers.

Dryden.

CORK. n. f. [from cortex, Lat. korck, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, fislus
Corticem aspicitum pice dimovebit
Amphoric fumum bibere instituit.

Consule Tullio. Hor.
1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft. Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the North of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I pry thee take the cork out of thy mouth; that

I may drink thy tidings. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Be sure, may very, sure, thy cork be good;
Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,

That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well.
King.

Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay.
Pope.

Co'RKING-PINS. n. f. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night.

Swift's Directions to the Chambermaid.
Co'RK'Y. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork; resembling cork.

Bind fast his corky arms. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Co'RMORANT. n. f. [from cormorant, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin.]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
When, spight of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy

That honour which shall 'bate his sythe's keen edge. Shakespeare.

Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Peacocks on Drawing.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life
Sat like a cormorant. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant.

Dryden's Fables.

2. A glutton.

CORN. n. f. [from corn, Sax. korn, Germ. It is found in all the Teutonic dialects; as, in an old Runick rhyme,

Haguler kallastur corna.
Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods;
such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone. John xii. 25.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.

Shakespeare.

2. Grain yet unready, standing in the field upon its stalk.

All the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe.

Kroll's Hist. of the Turks.
Still a murmur runs Along the soft inclining fields of corn.

Thomson's Autumn.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthreshed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Job. v. 26.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its cornuous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you.

Shakespeare.

The man that makes his toe,
What he his heart should make,
Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do en-grieve either towards rain and towards frost.

Bacon's Natural History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis. Wise man's Surgery.

He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gath'ring rain.

Gay's Pastorals.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns. Arbuthnot.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,
An offer'd fee from Radcliff scorned. Swift.

To

To CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

Hofst. ix. 1.
CORN-FLOWER. n. f. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the blue bottle, a kind of yellow marigold, with poppy and furmity.

Bacon's Nat. History.
Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them flower in June and July, and others in August. The seeds should be sown in March: they require a good soil.

CORN-LAND. n. f. [corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn-lands.

Mortimer's Husbandry.
CORN-MASTER. n. f. [corn and master.] One that cultivates corn for sale. Not in use.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time; a great grafter, a great sheep-master, a great timber-man, a great collector, a great corn-master, and a great lead-man.

Bacon.
CORN-MARIGOLD. n. f. [from corn and marigold.] A flower.

CORN-MILL. n. f. [corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mill's longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large hammers.

Mortimer.
CORN-PIPE. n. f. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by flitting the joint of a green stalk of corn.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,
To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms.

CORNCUTTER. n. f. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corn-cutter who had cleared it.

Wifeman.
I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician.

Speclator.
CORNEL.

CORNELIAN-TREE. } n. f. [cornus, Latin.]

The cornel-tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represents. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheelwork.

Mort.
Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter.

Bacon's Nat. History.

A huntress issuing from the wood,
Reclining on her cornel spear the flood.

Dryden.
Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows
The mast and acorn, brutal food! and throws
The fruits of cornel as they feast around.

Pope's Odyssey.
On wildings and on strawberries they fed;
Cornels and brambleberries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast.

Dryden's Ovid.
CORNELIAN-STONE. See CARNELIAN.

Woodward.
CORNER. n. f. [cornel, Welsh; corner, Fr.]

1. An angle, a place inclosed by two walls or lines, which would intersect each other, if drawn beyond the point where they meet.

2. A secret or remote place.

There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Deserves a corner.

It is better to dwell in a corner of a house top, than with a brawling woman and in a wide house.

Prov. xxv. 24.
I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner.

Acts, xxvi. 26.
All the inhabitants, in every corner of the island, have been absolutely reduced under his immediate subjection.

Davies.
Those vices, that lurk in the secret corners of the soul.

Addison.
3. The extremities; the utmost limit; thus every corner is the whole or every part.

Might I but through my prison, once a day,
Behold this maid, all corners else o' th' earth
Let liberty make use of it.

Shakespeare's Tempest.
I turn'd and try'd each corner of my bed,
To find if sleep was there; but sleep was lost.

Dryden.
CORNER-STONE. n. f. [corner and stone.] The stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' corner-stone?

Shakespeare.
A mason was fitting a corner-stone.

Howell's Vocal Forest.
CORNER-TEETH of a Horse, are the four teeth between the midding teeth and the tusks: two above and two below, on each side of the jaw, which shoot when the horse is four years and a half old.

Farrier's Dict.
CORNERWISE. adv. [corner and wise.] Diagonally; with the corner in front.

1. Strong or hard like horn; horny.

Up stood the corny reed,
Embattl'd in her field.

Milton's Par. Lost.
2. [from corn.] Producing grain or corn.

Tell me why the ant,
Midst Summer's plenty, thinks of Winter's want,
By constant journeys careful to prepare
Her stores; and bringing home the corny ear.

Prior.
3. Containing corn.

They lodge in habitations not their own,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known.

Dryden.
COROLLARY. n. f. [corollarium, Lat. from corolla; finis coronat opus; corollair, Fr.]

1. The conclusion: a corollary seems to be a conclusion, whether following from the premises necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corollary, that we enforce our vigilance against it.

Government of the Tongue.
As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself.

Dryd. Fables, Preface.
2. Surplus.

Bring a corollary,
Rather than want.

Shakespeare's Tempest.
CORU-

CORONA. n. f. [Latin.] A large flat member of the cornice, so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip. Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spektor.

CORONAL. n. f. [corona, Latin.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye god Bacchus with a coronal,
And Hymen also crown with wreaths of vine. Spenser.

CORONAL. adj. Belonging to the top of the head.

A man of about forty-five years of age came to me, with a round tubercle between the sagittal and coronal future. Wijeman.

CORONARY. adj. [coronarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots upon the crown. Brown.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley's Sermon.

CORONATION. n. f. [from corona, Lat.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation. Sydney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,
To shew my duty in your coronation. Shaksp. Hamlet.

A cough, sir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day. Shaksp. H. IV.

Now empress fame had publish'd the renown
Of Sh—'s coronation through the town. Dryden's Macbeth.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recal the fancy'd scene,
See coronations rise on ev'ry green. Pope.

CORONER. n. f. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to enquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury is impanelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him fit o' my uncle; for he's in the third degree of drink; he's drowned. Shaksp. Hamlet.

CORONET. n. f. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.]

1. An inferior crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery
Walk'd crowns and coronets, realms and islands were
As plates dropt from his pocket. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

All the rest are countesses.
—Their coronets say so. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,
Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt. Dryden.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
And garters, stars, and coronets appear. Pope.

2. An ornamental head-dress, in poetical language.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl. Sydney.

Under a coronet his flowing hair,
In curls, on either cheek play'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPORAL. n. f. [corrupted from corpora, Fr.]

The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corporal whisper'd in my ear,
Five pounds, if rightly tip'd, would set me clear. Gay.

CORPORAL. adj. [from corpora, Fr.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPORAL. adj. [from corpora, Fr.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPORAL. adj. [from corpora, Fr.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPORAL. adj. [from corpora, Fr.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him. Harris.

CORPORAL. adj. [from corpora, Fr.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body. To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied. Shaksp. Henry V.

Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding. Raleigh.

Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts, which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind. Atterbury.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporal is used, as a corporal being; but otherwise corporal. Corporal is having a body; corporal relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanished?
Into the air; and what seem'd corporal Melted, as breath, into the wind. Shaksp. Macbeth.

And from these corporal nutriments, perhaps
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPORALITY. n. f. [from corpora.] The quality of being embodied.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all other, the most subtle and pure. Raleigh's History.

CORPORALLY. adv. [from corpora.] Bodily.

The sun is corporally conjoined with basiliscus. Brown.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munster and Connaught, defacing and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled. Spenser on Ireland.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons. Swift.

2. General; united.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall. Shaksp. Timon.

CORPORATENESS. n. f. [from corporate.] The state of a body corporate; a community. Dict.

CORPORATION. n. f. [from corpora, Latin.]

A corporation is a body politic, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able by their comment consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir. Cowell.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are and do, in regard of their own being, but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of a society with men. Hooker.

Of this we find some foot-steps in our law,
Which doth her root from God and nature take;
Ten thousand men she doth together draw,
And of them all one corporation make. Davies.

CORPORATURE. n. f. [from corpora, Latin.] The state of a being embodied. Dict.

CORPOREAL. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPOREAL. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPOREAL. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPOREAL. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPOREAL. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPOREAL. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPOREAL. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That no corporal substances could add
Speed almost spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CORPOREAL. adj. [from corpora, Latin.]

1. Having a body; not immaterial; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporal. Soul's Sermons.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporal sense. Tilkinson.

The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporal prison freed. Dryden's Fables.

Fix thy corporal and internal eye
On the young gnat, or new-engender'd fly. Prior.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporal. I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Aimbury Downs; and I declare that a corporal false step is worse than a political one. Swift.

CORPORITY. n. f. [from corpora, Latin.]

Materiality; the quality of being embodied; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must submit of some corporicity which supposeth weight or gravity. Brown.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects, and this lower of corporicity. Glauville's Scepter.

The one attributed corporicity to God, and the other shape and figure. Stillingfleet.

CORPORIFICATION. n. f. [from corporify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

To CORPORIFY. v. a. [from corpora, Lat.] To embody; to insipitate into body. Not used.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporified. Boyle.

CORPS. n. f. [corps, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. A body.

That lewd ribauld
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin cleene,
To spoil her dainty corse, so fair and sheene,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Spenser.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this man, this vast unhide-bound corse. Milton.

He looks as man was made, with face erect,
That scorns his brittle corse, and seems asham'd
He's not all spirit. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend greet
My poor corse, where my bones shall be thrown. Shaksp. Hamlet.

There was the murder'd corse in covert laid,
And violent death in thousand shapes display'd. Dryden's Fables.

See where the corse of thy dead son approaches. Addison.

The corse was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command; he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body. Addison's Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.

Cold numbness freight bereaves
Her corse of sense, and the air her soul receives. Denham.

5. A body of forces.

CORPULENCE. n. f. [corpulentia, Latin.]

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unweildiness,
And burdalous corpulence my love had grown. Donne.

It is but one species of corpulency; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Spiffitude; grossness of matter.

The muscular flesh serves for the vibration of the tail, the heaviness and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray on the Creation.

CORPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.] Flethy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

Vol. I. No. II. 3 B We.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrases, and circuit of words; and when with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it maketh the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height.

CORPUSCLE, n. f. [corpusculum, Latin.] A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies?

CORPUSCULAR, adj. [corpuscular, Latin.] Relating to bodies; comprising bodies. It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscularians talk, in most things, more intelligibly than the peripateticks.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion.

CORRACLE. See CORRICLE.
TO CORRACDE, v. a. [corrado, Latin.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIATION, n. f. [con and radius, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertice point in the eye; so as there is a corradation, and conjunction of beams.

TO CORREOT, v. a. [corrigo, correctum, Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.
Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue: it corrects levity, and interrupts the confidence of sinning.

After he has once been corrected for a lie, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod ought to correct them, when they do amiss.

2. To amend; to take away faults, in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age.

Correcting Nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern: to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness, nor while we trust in the mercy of God thro' Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us.

As in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink: its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT, adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this, Which he presumes the most correct of his.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the fente is complete.

CORRECTION, n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod?

An offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs retolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle correction.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitious, wholesome, do not take a dram of country's dulness; do not add

Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad.

CORRECTIONER, n. f. [from correction.] One that has been in the house of correction; a jailbird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakespeare.

I will have you soundly swinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue; you filthy furnished correctioner!

CORRECTIVE, adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of bilious acali.

CORRECTIVE, n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too feculent a food.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment, which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explication or adumbration thereof.

CORRECTLY, adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low.

CORRECTNESS, n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air, and posture, and the correctness of design in this statue, are inexpressible.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness.

CORRECTOR, n. f. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin? How many rather to be correctors than practicers of religion.

With all his faults he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances.

2. He that revives any thing to free it from faults; as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another: as the laxative salts prevent the grievous vellications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to their intestinal membranes, and as spices and carminative seeds assist the operation of some catharticks, by dissipating wind.

In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector, which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with: thus turpentine is corrector of quicksilver, by destroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture.

TO CORRELATE, v. n. [from con and relatus, Latin.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CORRELATE, n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by cutting off his son: and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate.

CORRELATIVE, adj. [con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other.

CORRELATIVENESS, n. f. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION, n. f. [corripio, corruptum, Latin.] Objurcation; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and fraternal correction.

TO CORRESPOND, v. n. [con and respondere, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time.

Holder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that.

Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. } n. f. [from correspond.]

CORRESPONDENCY. } n. f. [from correspond.]

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the other's more perfect direction.

Hooker.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations keep the same to one another.

Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms.

King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence With the enemy, and thus they would betray us.

Dunham.

It happens very oddly that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter.

Addison.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civility.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state.

Bacon.

CORRESPONDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally proposed to keep.

Hooker.

And as five zones th' ethereal regions bind, Five correspondent are to earth assign'd.

Dryden's Ovid.

CORRESPONDENT. n. f. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad.

Denham's Dedication.

CORRESPONSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's fix gates i' th' city, with maffy staples, And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts, Sperre up the sons of Troy.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

CORRIDOR. n. f. [French.]

1. In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long ile round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other.

Harris.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost entirely ruined.

Addison on Italy.

CORRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Lat.]

1. That which may be altered or amended.

2. He who is a proper object of punishment; punishable.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language.

Howell's Vocal Forest.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct. Not proper, nor used.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our will are gardeners; so that, if we will either have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will.

Shakespeare's Othello.

CORRIVAL. n. f. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other.

Sponser on Ireland.

He that doth redeem her thence, might wear Without corrivall all her dignities.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

CORRIVALRY. n. f. [from corrivall.] Competition; opposition.

CORROBORANT. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power to give strength.

There be divers sorts of bracelets fit to comfort the spirits, and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient.

Bacon's Natural History.

TO CORROBORATE. v. a. [con and robor, Latin.]

1. To confirm; to establish.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favour'd instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom.

Bacon.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it.

Bacon.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observations on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awak'd his spirits, and corroborated his judgment.

Watson.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby.

Watts.

CORROBORATION. n. f. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength.

The lady herself procured a bull, for the better corroboration of the marriage.

Bacon's Henry VII.

CORROBORATIVE. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power of increasing strength.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix corroboratives of an astringent faculty; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried.

Wise man's Surgery.

TO CORRODE. v. a. [corrodo, Lat.] To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode The bad with bad, a spider with a toad; For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill, And make her do much good against her will.

Denham.

We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigrease, is wont to reduce it to a green blue solution.

Boyle on Colours.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding invasions of so long a time.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Hannibal the Pyreneans past, And steepy Alps, the mounds that nature cast, And with corroding juices, as he went, A passage through the living rock he rent.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Fishes which neither chew their meat, nor grind it in their stomachs, do, by a dissolvent liquor there provided, corrode and reduce it into a chylus.

Ray on the Creation.

The blood turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing almost all the diseases of the inflammatory kind.

Leibniz.

Should jealousy its venom once diffuse, Corroding every thought, and blasting all Love's paradise.

Thomson's Spring.

CORRODENT. adj. [from corrodo.] Having the power of corroding or wasting anything away.

CORRODIBILITY. n. f. [from corrodo.] The quality of being corroisible; possibility to be consumed by a menstruum.

CORRODIBLE. adj. [from corrodo.] Possible to be consumed or corroded.

Metals, although corrodible by waters, yet will not suffer liquation from the powerfulllest heat communicable unto that element.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CO'RDODY. n. f. [from corrodo, Lat.] A defalcation from an allowance or salary for some other than the original purpose.

Besides these floating burgessees of the ocean, there are certain flying citizens of the air, which prescribe for a cordody therein.

Carew.

In those days even noble persons, and other meaner men, ordered cordodies and pensions to their chaplains and servants out of churches.

Ayliffe's Patergon.

CORRO'SIBLE. adj. [from corrodo.] Possible to be consumed by a menstruum, this ought to be corrodible.

CORRO'SILENEES. n. f. [from corrosibile.] Susceptibility of corrosion; rather corrodibility. DiC.

CORRO'SION. n. f. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid, or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals: so that the menstrua here employed, have a considerable moment or force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved; so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstrua, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportioned to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm.

Quincy.

A kind of poison worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature.

Bacon's Natural History.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation.

Woodew.

CORRO'SIVE. adj. [from corrodo, Latin.] It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indifferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away.

Gold, after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form.

Greav's Cofmol.

The sacred fons of vengeance, on whose course Corrosive famine waits, and kills the year.

Thomson's Spring.

2. Having the quality to fret or vex. If the maintenance of ceremonies be a corrosive to such as oppugn them, undoubtedly to such as maintain them it can be no great pleasure, when they behold that which they reverence is oppugned.

Hooker.

CORRO'SIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the quality of wasting anything away, as the flesh of an ulcer.

He meant his corrosives to apply, And with strict diet tame his stubborn malady.

Fairy Queen.

corrosiveness at all, but coldness, mixt with a somewhat languid relish retaining to bitterness.

Boyle.
CORRUGANT, adj. [from corrugate.] Having the power of contracting into wrinkles.

To CORRUGATE, v. a. [from corrugate, Latin.] To wrinkle or purse up; as the skin is drawn into wrinkles by cold, or any other cause.

Quincy.
The cramp cometh of contraction of sinews:
it cometh either by cold or dryness; for cold and dryness do both of them contract and corrugate.

Bacon's Natural History.
CORRUGATION, n. f. [from corrugate.] Contraction into wrinkles.

The pain of the solid parts is the corrugation or violent agitation of fibres, when the spirits are ir-be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

2 Cor. xi. 3.
Evil communications corrupt good manners.

1 Cor. xv. 33.
All that have miscarried
By underhand, corrupted, foul injustice.

Shakespeare, Richard III.
I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
But stay, I smell a man of middle earth;
With trial fire touch me his finger-end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he flant,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
Language being the conduct whereby men convey their knowledge, he that makes an ill use of it, though he does not corrupt the fountains of knowledge, which are in things, yet he stops the pipes.

Locke.
Hear the black trumpet through the world proclaim,
That not to be corrupted is the shame.

Pope.
2. To spoil; to do mischief.

To CORRUPT, v. n. To become putrid; to grow rotten; to putrefy; to lose purity.

The aptness or propensity of air or water to corrupt or putrefy, no doubt, is to be found before it break forth into manifest effects of diseases, blasting, or the like.

Bacon.
CORRUPT, adj. [from corrupt.]

1. Spoiled; tainted; vitiated in its qualities.

Coarse hoary moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon the points of their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who with such corrupt and pestilent bread would feed them.

Knolles.
2. Unsound; putrid.

As superfluous flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no corrupt jot.

Spenser.
3. Vicious; tainted with wickedness; without integrity.

Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying.

1 Pp. iv. 29.

Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire. Shakespeare.
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty filky ducking observants.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
Some, who have been corrupt in their morals, have yet been infinitely solicitous to have their children piously brought up.

South's Sermons.
CORRUPTER, n. f. [from corrupt.] He that taints or vitiates; he that lessens purity or integrity.

Away, away, corrupters of my faith.

Shakespeare.
From the vanity of the Greeks, the corrupters of all truth, who, without all ground of certainty, vaunt their antiquity, came the error first of all.

Raleigh's History of the World.
These great corrupters of Christianity, and indeed of natural religion, the Jesuits.

Addison.
CORRUPTIBILITY, n. f. [from corruptible.]
Possibility to be corrupted.

CORRUPTIBLE, adj. [from corrupt.]

1. Susceptible of destruction by natural decay, or without violence.

Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they shall live, were it not that they are joined with his body, which is incorruptible, and that this is in ours as a cause of immortality.

Hooker.
It is a devouring corruption of the essential mixture, which consisting chiefly of an oily moisture, is corruptible through dissipation.

Harvey on Consumptions.
The several parts of which the world consists, being in their nature corruptible, it is more than probable, that, in an infinite duration, this frame of things would long since have been dissolved.

Tillotson.
2. Susceptible of external depravation; possible to be tainted or vitiated.

CORRUPTIBLENESS, n. f. [from corruptible.]
Susceptibility of corruption.

CORRUPTIBLY, adv. [from corruptible.] In CORRUPTION, n. f. [from corruptio, Latin.]

1. The principle by which bodies tend to the separation of their parts.

2. Wickedness; perversion of principles; loss of integrity.

Precepts of morality, besides the natural corruption of our temper, which makes us averse to them, are so abstracted from ideas of sense, that they seldom get an opportunity for descriptions and images.

Addison on the Gangicks.
Amidst corruption, luxury, and rage,
Still leave some ancient virtues to our age.

Pope.
3. Putrefaction.

The wife contriver, on his end intent,
Careful this fatal error to prevent,
And keep the waters from corruption free,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the sea.

Blackmore.
4. Matter or pus in a sore.

5. The tendency to a worse state.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
6. Cause, or means of depravation.

The region hath by conquest, and corruption of other languages, received new and different names.

Raleigh's History.
All these four kinds of corruption are very common in their language; for which reasons the Greek tongue is become much altered.

Brewer on Languages.
7. [In law.] An infection growing to a man at-tainted of felony, or treason, and to his issue: for as he loseth all to the prince, or other lord of the fee, so his issue cannot be heir to him, or to any other ancestor, of whom they might have claimed by him; and if he were noble or a gentleman, he and his children are made ignoble and ungentle, in respect of the father.

Cowel.

CORRUPTIVE, adj. [from corrupt.] Having the quality of tainting or vitiating.

Carrying a settled habitude unto the corruptive
originals.

As ever wielded spear in warlike hand.

Spenser.
2. A dead body; a carcase: a poetical word.

That from her body, full of filthy sin,
He reft her hateful head, without remorse;

A stream of coal-black blood forth gushed from her corse.

Spenser.
Set down the corse; or by saint Paul,
I'll make a corse of him that disobeys.

Shakespeare, Richard III.
What may this mean?

That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,
Revisit'st thus, the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Here lay him down, my friends,
Full in my fight, that I may view at leisure
The bloody corse, and count those glorious wounds.

Addison.
CORSELET, n. f. [from corcelet, Fr.] A light armour for the forepart of the body.

Some shirts of mail, some coats of plate put on

Some don'd a cuirace, some a corcelet bright.

Fairfax.

They lash, they foil, they pass, they strive to bore

Their corselets, and their thinnest parts explore.

Dryden.
But heroes, who o'ercome or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which, in battle's heat,
Against their very corselets beat.

Prior.
CORTICAL, adj. [from cortex, bark, Lat.] Barky; belonging to the outer part; belonging to the rind;
outward.

Their last extremities form a little gland (all these little glands together make the cortical part of the brain), terminating in two little vessels.

COSMOGRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from cosmographical.] In a manner relating to the science by which the structure of the world is discovered and described.

The terrella, or spherical magnet cosmographically set out with circles of the globe.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
COSMO'GRAPHY. n. f. [κόσμος and γραφω.] The science of the general system or affections of the world, distinct from geography, which delivers the situation and boundaries of particular countries.

Here it might see the world without travel; it being a lesser scheme of the creation, nature contracted, a little cosmography, or map of the universe. South.

COSMOPO'LITAN. } n. f. [κόσμος and πολίτης.]
COSMOPO'LITE. } A citizen of the world; one who is at home in every place.

COS'SET. n. f. A lamb brought up without the dam.

If thou wilt bewail my woeful teen,
I shall thee give yond' cosset for thy pain. Spenser.

COST. n. f. [κοστ, Dutch. As this word is found in the remotest Teutonic dialects, even in the Islandick, it is not probably derived to us from the Latin costo; though it is not unlikely that the French couster comes from the Latin.]

1. The price of any thing.

2. Sumptuousness; luxury.

The city woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders. Shakespeare.

Let foreign princes vainly boast
The rude effects of pride and cost
Of vaster fabricks, to which they Contribute nothing but the pay. Waller.

3. Charge; expence.

While he found his daughter maintained without his cost, he was content to be deaf to any noise of infamy. Sidney.

I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost,
To ransom home revolted Mortimer. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift? 2 Sam. xix. 42.

And wilt thou, O cruel boast!
Put poor nature to such cost?
O! 'twill undo our common mother,
To be at charge of such another. Craford.

It is strange to see any ecclesiastical pile, not by ecclesiastical cost and influence, rising above ground; especially in an age in which men's mouths are open against the church, but their hands shut towards it. South's Sermons.

He whose tale is best, and pleases most,
Should win his supper at our common cost. Dryden's Fables.

Fourteen thousand pounds are paid by Wood for the purchase of his patent: what were his other visible costs I know not; what his latent is variously conjectured. Swift.

4. Loss; fine; detriment.

What they had fondly wished, proved afterwards to their costs over true. Knolles's History of the Turks.

TO COST. v. n. pret. cost; particip. cost. [couster, French.] To be bought for; to be had at a price.

The dagger and poison are always in readiness; but to bring the action to extremity, and then recover all, will require the art of a writer, and cost him many a pang. Dryden.

COS'TAL. adj. [costa, Lat. a rib.] Belonging to the ribs.

Hereby are excluded all cetaceous and cartilaginous fishes, many pectinal, whose ribs are recitinal; and many costal, which have their ribs embowed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COS'TARD. n. f. [from coster, a head.]

1. A head.

Take him over the costard with the belt of thy sword. Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. An apple round and bulky like the head.
Many country vicars are driven to shifts; and, if our greedy patrons hold us to such conditions, they will make us turn costard mongers, graffers, or fell ale. Burton on Melancholy.

CO'STIVE. adj. [constipatus, Lat. constipé, Fr.]

1. Bound in the body; having the excretions obstructed.

When the passage of the gall becomes obstructed, the body grows costive, and the excrements of the belly white. Brown.

While faster than his costive brain indites,
Philo's quick hand in flowing letters writes;
His case appears to me like honest Teague's,
When he was run away with, by his legs. Prior.

2. Clofe; impermeable.

Clay in dry seasons is costive, hardening with the sun and wind, 'till unlocked by industry, so as to admit of the air and heavenly influences. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CO'STIVENESS. n. f. [from costive.] The state of the body in which excretion is obstructed.

Costiveness disperfs malign putrid fumes out of the guts and mesentery into all parts of the body, occasioning head-aches, fevers, loss of appetite, and disturbance of concoction. Harvey.

Costiveness has ill effects, and is hard to be dealt with by physick; purging medicines rather increasing than removing the evil. Locke on Education.

CO'STLINESS. n. f. [from costly.] Sumptuousness; expensiveness.

Though not with curious costliness, yet with cleanly sufficiency it entertained me. Sidney.

Nor have the frugaller sons of fortune any reason to object the costliness; since they frequently pay dearer for less advantageous pleasures. Glanville's Scepsis.

CO'STLY. adj. [from cost.] Sumptuous; expensive; of a high price.

Costly thy habits as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy: rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Leave for a while thy costly country-seat;
And to be great indeed, forget
The nauseous pleasures of the great. Dryden.

The chapel of St. Laurence will be perhaps the most costly piece of work on the earth, when completed. Addison.

He is here speaking of Paradise, which he represents as a most charming and delightful place; abounding with things not only useful and convenient, but even the most rare and valuable, the most costly and desirable. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

COS'TMARY. n. f. [costus, Latin.] An herb.

COS'TREL. n. f. [supposed to be derived from coster.] A bottle. Skinner.

COT. } At the end of the names of places,
COTE. } come generally from the Saxon cot, COAT. } a cottage. Gibson.

COT. n. f. [cot, Sax. cwt. Welsh.] A small house; a cottage; a hut; a mean habitation.

What that usage meant,
Which in her cot she daily practised. Fairy Queen.

Besides his cot, his flocks, and bounds of feed,
Are now on sale; and at our sheep cot now,
By reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will feed on. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Hezekiah made himself stalls for all manner of beasts, and cots for flocks. 2 Chron. xxxii. 28.

A stately temple shoots within the skies;
The crotchets of their cot in columns rise;
The pavement, polish'd marble they behold;
The gates with sculpture grac'd, the spires and tiles of gold. Dryden's Baucis and Philemon.

As Jove vouchsaf'd on Ida's top, 'tis said,
At poor Philemon's cot to take a bed. Fairfax.

COT. n. f. An abridgment of cotqueon.

COTA'NGENT. n. f. [In geometry.] The tangent of an arch which is the complement of another to ninety degrees. Harris.

TO COTE. v. a. This word, which I have found only in Chapman, seems to signify the same as To leave behind, To overpass.

COT

Words her worth had prov'd with deeds, Had more ground been allow'd the race, and coted far his steeds. Chapman's Iliad.

COTEMPORARY. adj. [con and tempus, Latin.] Living at the same time; cotaneous; contemporary.

What would not, to a rational man, cotemporary with the first voucher, have appeared probable, is now used as certain, because several have since, from him, said it one after another. Locke.

COTLAND. n. f. [cot and land.] Land appendant to a cottage.

COTQUEAN. n. f. [probably from cogit, Fr.]
A man who busies himself with women's affairs.
Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica;
Spare not for cost.—

—Go, go, you cotquean, go;
Get you to bed. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

A statefwoman is as ridiculous a creature as a cogitator: each of the sexes should keep within its bounds. Addison.

You have given us a lively picture of husbands hen-peck'd; but you have never touched upon one of the quite different character, and who goes by the name of cotquean. Addison.

COTTAGE. n. f. [from cot.] A hut; a mean habitation; a cot; a little house.

The sea-coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks. Zeph. ii. 6.

They were right glad to take some corner of a poor cottage, and there to serve God upon their knees. Hooker.

The self-same sun that shines upon his court,
Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on both alike. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Let the women of noble birth and great fortunes nurse their children, look to the affairs of the house, visit poor cottages, and relieve their necessities. Taylor's Holy Living.

It is difficult for a peasant, bred up in the ab-scurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the splendors of a court. South.

Beneath our humble cottage let us haste,
And here, unenvied, rural dainties taste.

COTTAGER. n. f. [from cottage.]
1. One who lives in a hut or cottage.

Let us from our farms,
Call forth our cottagers to arms. Swift.

The most ignorant Irish cottager will not sell his cow for a groat. Swift's Address to Parliament.

2. A cottager, in law, is one that lives on the common, without paying rent, and without any land of his own.

The husbandmen and plowmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, or else mere cottagers, which are but housed beggars. Bacon's Henry VII.

The yeomenry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon's Henry VII.

COTTIER. n. f. [from cot.] One who inhabits a cot. Diët.

COTTON. n. f. [named according to Skinner, from the down that adheres to the malla cotonea, or quince, called by the Italians cotogni; whence co- tone, Ital. cotton, French.]

1. The down of the cotton-tree.
The pin ought to be as thick as a rowling-pin, and covered with cotton, that its hardness may not be offensive. Wifeman.

2. Cloth made of cotton.
COTTON. n. f. A plant.

The species are, 1. Shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish seed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton, of the island of Providence. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe.
This cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk or seed-vessel growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world.

COU

The second and third sorts are annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty.
But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude. Miller.

TO COTTON. v. n.

1. To rise with a nap.
2. To cement; to unite with: a cant word.

A quarrel will end in one of you being turned off, in which case it will not be easy to cotton with another. Swift.

TO COUCH. v. n. [coucher, French.]

1. To lie down on a place of repose.
If I court more women, you'll couch with more men. Shaksp.

Doth not the gentleman
Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed,
As ever Beatrice shall couch upon? Shaksp.

When love's fair goddess
Couch'd with her husband in his golden bed.

2. To lie down on the knees, as a beast to rest.
Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,
Fierce tigers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. Dryden's Virgil.

These when death
Comes like a rushing lion, couch like spaniels,
With lolling tongues, and tremble at the paw. Dryden.

3. To lie down in secret, or in ambush.
We'll couch 'till the cattle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairs. Shaksp.

The Earl of Angus couch'd in a furrow, and was pass'd over for dead, until a horse was brought for his escape. Hayward.

4. To lie in a bed, or stratum.
Blessed of the Lord be his land for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath. Deut. xxxiii. 13.

5. To stoop; or bend down; to lower in fear, in pain, in respect.
These couchings, and these lowly curtesies,
Might stir the blood of ordinary men.

Shaksp. Julius Caesar.
Iffachar, is a strong ass couching down between two burdens. Gen. xlix. 14.

TO COUCH. v. a.

1. To repose; to lay on a place of repose.
Where unbruised youth, with unstuff'd brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.

2. To lay down any thing in a bed, or stratum.
If the weather be warm, we immediately couch malt about a foot thick; but if a hotter season require it, we spread it on the floor much thinner.

The sea and the land make one globe; and the waters couch themselves, as close as may be, to the centre of this globe, in a spherical convexity.

3. To bed; to hide in another body.
It is at this day in use at Gaza, to couch potsherds, or vessels of earth, in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To involve; to include; to comprise.
But who will call those noble who deface,
By meaner acts, the glories of their race;
Whose only title to our father's fame,
Is couch'd in the dead letters of their name?

5. To include secretly; to hide: with and.
The foundation of all parables, is some analogy or similitude between the topical or allusive part of the parable and the thing couch'd under it, and intended by it. South.

There is all this, and more, that lies naturally couch'd under this allegory. L'Estrange.

The true notion of the institution being lost, the tradition of the deluge, which was couch'd under it, was thereupon at length suspended and lost.

Woodward's Natural History.

COV

6. To lay close to another.
And over all, with brazen scales was arm'd,
Like plated coat of steel, to couch'd near,
That nought might pierce. Spenser.

7. To fix the spear in the rest; in the posture of attack.

The knight 'gan fairly couch his steady spear,
And fiercely ran at him with rigorous might. Spenser.

Before each van Prick forth the aery knights, and couch their spears,
'Till thickest legions close. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The former way'd in air
His flaming sword, Æneas couch'd his spear. Dryden's Æneid.

8. To depress the condensed crystalline humour or film that overspreads the pupil of the eye. This is improperly called couching the eye, for couching the cataract: with equal impropriety they sometimes speak of couching the patient.

Some artists, whose nice hand
Couches the cataracts, and clears his eyes,
And all at once a flood of glorious light
Comes rushing on his eyes. Dewin.

Whether the cataract be waded by being separated from its vessels, I have never known positively, by dissecting one that had been couch'd.

COUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A seat of repose, on which it is common to lie down dressed.
So Satan fell; and straight a fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh,
Who on their plumed vans receiv'd him soft,
From his uneasy station, and upbore,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air.

2. To loll on couches rich with citron feds,
And lay their guilty limbs in Tyrian beds.

3. O, ye immortal pow'rs that guard the just,
Watch round his couch, and soften his repose!

4. A bed; a place of repose.
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.

5. Dire was the tossing! deep the groans! despair
Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch.

6. This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
Forsook his early couch at early day.

7. A laver, or stratum.
This heap is called by maltsters a couch, or bed of raw malt. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COUCHANT. adj. [couchant, Fr.] Lying down; squatting.

If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not probably a lion rampant, but rather couchant or dormant. Brown.

As a tyger, who by chance hath spy'd
In some purlieu, two gentle fawns at play, Strait couches close; then rising, changes oft
His couchant watch.

COUCHEE. n. f. [French.] Bedtime; the time of visiting late at night.

None of her sylvan subjects made their court;
Leaves and couchers pass'd without resort. Dryden.

COUCHER. n. f. [from couch.] He that couches or depresses cataracts.

COUCHFELLOW. n. f. [couch and fellow.] Bedfellow; companion.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couchfellow, Nim; or else you had looked through the grate like a geminy of baboons. Shaksp.

COUCHGRASS. n. f. A weed.

The couchgrass, for the first year, insensibly robs most plants in sandy grounds apt to graze.

COVE. n. f.

1. A small creek or bay.

2. A shelter; a cover.

COVENANT.

COVENANT. n. f. [covenant, Fr. conventum, Latin.]

1. A contract; a stipulation.
He makes a covenant never to destroy
The earth again by flood; nor let the sea Surpass his bounds. Milton's Par. Lost.
The English make the ocean their abode,
Whose ready sails with ev'ry wind can fly,
And make a cov'nant with th' unconstant sky. Waller.

Some men live as if they had made a covenant with hell: let divines, fathers, friends say what they will, they stop their ears against them L'Estrange.

2. An agreement on certain terms; a compact.
A covenant is a mutual compact, as we now consider it, betwixt God and man; consisting of mercies on God's part, made over to man, and of conditions on man's part, required by God. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

3. A writing containing the terms of agreement.
I shall but lend my diamond 'till your return;
let there be covenants drawn between us. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To COVENANT. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To bargain; to stipulate.
His lord used commonly to covenant with him which if at any time the tenant disliked, he might, freely depart at his pleasure. Spenser's State of Ireland.

It hath been covenanted between him and the king of England, that neither of them should treat of peace or truce with the French king.
Hayward on Edward VI.
By words men come to know one another's minds; by these they covenant and confederate. South.

Jupiter covenanted with him, that it should be hot or cold, wet or dry, calm or windy, as the tenant should direct. L'Estrange.
2. To agree with another on certain terms:
with for before either the price or the thing purchased.

They covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. Matthew.
Pointing to a heap of sand,
For ev'ry grain to live a year demand;
But, ah! unmindful of th' effect of time,
Forgot to covenant for youth and prime. Garth's Ovid.

COVENANTE'E. n. f. [from covenant.] A party to a covenant; a stipulator; a bargainer.
Both of them were respective rites of their admission into the several covenants, and the cove- nantees become thereby entitled to the respective privileges. Ayliffe's Purgeon.

COVENANTER. n. f. [from covenant.] One who takes a covenant. A word introduced in the civil wars.
The covenanters shall have no more assurance of mutual assistance each from other, after the taking of the covenant, than they had before. Oxford Reasons against the Covenant.

CO'VENOUS. adj. [from covin.] Fraudulent; collusive; trickish.

I with some means devised for the restraint of these inordinate and covenous leases of lands, holden in chief, for hundreds or thousands of years. Bacon's Off. of Alienation.

To CO'VER. v. a. [coverer, French.]
1. To overspread any thing with something else.

The pastures are clothed with flocks, the valleys also are covered over with corn. Psalms lxx. 13.
Sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore. Milton.

The flaming mount appear'd
In Dothan cover'd with a camp of fire. Milton.
Go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

2. To conceal under something laid over.
Nor hether outward, only with the skins
Of beasts, but inward nakedness much more Opprobrious, with his robe of righteousness

Arraying, cover'd from his father's sight. Milton.

Cover me, ye pines,
Ye cedars with innumerable boughs
Hide me, that I may never see them more. Milt.
In life's cool vale let my low scene be laid,
Cover me, gods, with Temple's thickest shade. Cowley.

Or lead me to some solitary place,
And cover my retreat from human race. Dryden's Virgil.

3. To hide by superficial appearances.
4. To overwhelm; to bury.
Raillery and wit serve only to cover nonsense with shame, when reason has first proved it to be mere nonsense. Watts.

5. To conceal from notice or punishment.
Charity shall cover the multitude of sins. 1 Pet. iv. 8.

Thou may'st repent,
And one bad act with many deeds well done
May 't cover. Milton.

6. To shelter; to protect.
His calm and blameless life
Does with substantial blessedness abound,
And the soft wings of peace cover him round. Cowley.

7. To incubate; to brood on.
Natural historians observe, that only the male birds have voices; that their songs begin a little before breeding-time, and end a little after; that whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means amuses and diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison's Spectator.

8. To copulate with a female.
9. To wear the hat, or the garment of the head, as a mark of superiority, or independence.
That king had conferred the honour of grandee upon him, which was of no other advantage or signification to him, than to be covered in the presence of that king. Dryden.

CO'VER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Any thing that is laid over another.
The fecundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, the skin is shaped according to the parts. Bacon.
The fountains could be strengthened no other way than by making a strong cover or arch over them. Eurnet's Theory.

Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers, and not finished yet. Dryden's Juv.
With your hand, or any other cover, you stop the vessel, so as wholly to exclude the air. Roy on the Creation.

2. A concealment; a screen; a veil; a superficial appearance, under which something is hidden.

The truth and reason of things may be artificially and effectually insinuated, under the cover either of a real fact, or of a supposed one. L'Estrange.

As the spleen has great inconveniences, so the pretence of it is a handsome cover for imperfec-tions. Collier on the Spleen.

3. Shelter; defence from weather.
In the mean time, by being compelled to lodge in the field, which grew now to be very cold, whilst his army was under cover, they might be forced to retire. Clarendon.

COVER-SHAME. n. f. [cover and shame.] Some appearance used to conceal infamy.
Does he put on holy garments for a cover-shame of lewdness? Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

CO'VERING. n. f. [from cover.] Dreis; vesture; any thing spread over another.
The women took and spread a covering over the well's mouth. 2 Sam. xvii. 19.

Bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll intreat to lead me. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Through her flesh methinks is seen
The brighter soul that dwells within,

Our eyes the subtle covering pass,
And see the lily through its glass. Cowley.
Then from the floor he rais'd a royal bed,
With coverings of Sidonian purple spread. Dryden's Fables.

Sometimes Providence casts things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow it. South.

CO'VERLET. n. f. [coverlet, French.] The outermost of the bedcloaths; that under which all the rest are concealed.

Lay her in lilies and in violets,
And filken curtains over her display,
And odour'd sheets, and arras coverlets. Spenser.
This done, the host produc'd the genial bed,
Which with no costly coverlet they spread. Dryden's Fables.

I was, for want of a house and bed, forced to lie on the ground, wrapt up in my coverlet. Swift.

CO'VERT. n. f. [from cover, couvert, French.]
1. A shelter; a defence.

Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a cover to them from the face of the spoiler. Isaiah, xvi. 4.

There shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and rain. Isaiah, iv. 6.

They are by sudden alarm, or watch-word, to be called out to their military motions, under sky or covert, according to the season, as was the Roman wont. Milton on Education.

It was the hour of night, when thus the Son
Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert nigh
Of trees thick interwoven. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Now have a care your carnations catch not too much wet, therefore retire them to covert. Evelyn's Kalendar.

2. A thicket, or hiding place.
Tow'rsd him I made; but he was 'ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

I shall be your faithful guide,
Through this gloomy covert wide. Milton.
Thence to the covers, and the conscious groves,
The scenes of his past triumphs and his loves. Denham.

Deep into some thick covert would I run, Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden's State of Innocence.

The deer lodg'd; I have track'd her to her covert:
Be sure ye mind the word; and when I give it,
Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey. Addison's Cato.

CO'VERT. adj. [covert, French.]
1. Sheltered; not open: not exposed.
You are, of either side the green, to plant a covert alley, upon carpenter's work, about twelve foot in height, by which you may go in shade into the garden. Bacon.

The fox is a beast also very prejudicial to the husbandman, especially in places that are near forest-woods and covert places. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield. Pope's Essays.

2. Secret; hidden; private; insidious.
And let us presently go fit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

But what best way,
Whether of open war, or covert guile,
We now debate. Milton's Par. Lost.

CO'VERT. adj. [covert, French.] The state of a woman sheltered by marriage under her husband; as covert baron, femme covert.

Instead of her being under covert baron, to be under covert femme myself; to have my body disabled, and my head fortified. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

CO'VERT WAY.

COVERT-WAY. n. f. [from covert and way.]

It is, in fortification, a space of ground level with the field, on the edge of the ditch, three or four fathom broad, ranging quite round the half moons, or other works towards the country. One of the greatest difficulties in a siege is to make a lodgment on the covert-way, because usually the besieged palisade it along the middle, and undermine it on all sides. It is sometimes called the corridor, and sometimes the counterfearp, because it is on the edge of the scarp.

COVERTLY. adv. [from covert.] Secretly; closely; in private; with privacy.

Yet still Aragnol (to his foe was hight)

Lay lurking, covertly him to surprize.

How canst thou cross this marriage?
—Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me.

Amongst the poets Persius covertly strikes at Nero; some of whose verses he recites with scorn and indignation.

COVERTNESS. n. f. [from covert.] Secrecy; privacy.

COVERTURE. n. f. [from covert.]

1. Shelter; defence; not exposure.

It may be it is rather the shade, or other covertures, that they take liking in, than the virtue of the herb.

He saw their shame that fought

Vain covertures.
The winds being so fierce, and so severe, as not to suffer any thing to thrive beyond the height of a shrub, in these islands, unless protected by walls, or other like covertures.

2. [In law.] The estate and condition of a married woman, who, by the laws of our realm, is in protectio viri, and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of herself or her husband, without his allowance or confirmation.

The infancy of king Edward VI. and the coverture of queen Mary, did, in fact, disable them to accomplish the conquest of Ireland.

TO CO'VET. v. a. [convoyter, French.]

1. To desire inordinately; to desire beyond due bounds.

If it be a sin to covert honour,
I am the most offending man alive.

I am yet
Unknown to woman, never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coverted what was mine own,
At no time broke my faith.

O father! can it be that foul's sublime,
Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
And that the generous mind, releas'd by death,
Can covert lazy limbs and mortal breath?

2. To desire earnestly.

All things covert as much as may be to be like unto God in being ever; that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seek to continue itself another way, by offspring and propagation.

But covert earnestly the best gifts.

TO CO'VET. v. n. To have a strong desire.

The love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coverted after, they have erred from the faith.

CO'VETABLE. adj. [from covert.] To be wished for; to be coveted.

CO'VETISE. n. f. [convoytise, French.] Avarice; covetousness of money. Not in use.

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffice,

Whose greedy lust did lack in greatest store;
Whose need had end, but no end covertise.

CO'VETOUS. adj. [convoytous, French.]

1. Inordinately desirous; eager.

While lumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,

The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood the unhospitable coast.

3. Inordinately eager of money; avaricious.

An heart they have exercised with covetous practices.

What he cannot help in his nature, you must not account a vice in him: you must in no ways say he is covetous.

Let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh.

3. Desirous; eager: in a good sense.

Sheba was never
More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue,
Than this fair soul shall be.

He that is envious or angry at a virtue that is not his own, at the perfection or excellency of his neighbour, is not covetous of the virtue, but of its reward and reputation, and then his intentions are polluted.

CO'VETOUSLY. adv. [from covetous] Avariciously; eagerly.

If he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall's get it?

CO'VETOUSNESS. n. f. [from covetous.]

1. Avarice; inordinate desire of money; eagerness of gain.

He that takes pains to serve the ends of covetousness, or ministers to another's lust, or keeps a shop of impurities or intemperance, is idle in the worst sense.

Covetousness debaseth a man's spirit, and sinks it into the earth.

2. Eagerness; desire: in a neutral sense.

When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness.

CO'VEY. n. f. [couvee, French.]

1. A hatch; an old bird with her young ones.

2. A number of birds together.

A flight of wags and covey of partridges went to a farmer, and begged a sup of him to quench their thirst.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder.

There would be no walking in a shady wood without springing a covey of toasts.

COUGH. n. f. [kuch, Dutch.] A convulsion of the lungs, vellicated by some sharp serosity. It is pronounced off.

In consumptions of the lungs, when nature cannot expel the cough, men fall into fluxes of the belly, and then they die.

For his dear sake long restless nights you bore,
While rattling coughs his heaving vessels tore.

TO COUGH. v. n. [kuchen, Dutch.] To have the lungs convulsed; to make a noise in endeavouring to evacuate the peccant matter from the lungs.

Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at.

Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath awakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun.

The first problem enquireth why a man dath cough, but not an ox or cow; whereas the contrary is often observed.

If any humour be discharged upon the lungs, they have a faculty of casting it up by coughing.

I cough like Horace, and though lean, am short.

TO COUGH. v. a. To eject by a cough; to expectorate.

If the matter be to be discharged by expectoration, it must first pass into the substance of the lungs, then into the aspera arteria, or wind-pipe, and from thence be coughed up, and spit out by the mouth.

CO'UGHER. n. f. [from cough.] One that coughs.

CO'VIN. } n. f. A deceitful agreement between two or more, to the hurt of another.

CO'VING. n. f. [from cove.] A term in building, used of houses that project over the ground-plot, and the turned projecture arched with timber, lathed and plastered.

COULD. [the imperfect preterite of can. See CAN.] Was able to; had power to.

And if I have done well, and as is fitting the story, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain unto.

What if he did not all the ill he could?
And I oblig'd by that t' assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders?

CO'ULTER. n. f. [cultor, Lat.] The sharp iron of the plow which cuts the earth, perpendicular to the share.

The Israelites went down to sharpen every man his share, and his coulters, and his ax, and his mattock.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, to whet their natural faculties.

The plough for stiff clays is long and broad, and the coulters long, and very little bending, with a very large wing.

CO'UNCIL. n. f. [concilium, Latin.]

1. An assembly of persons met together in consultation.

The chief priests, and all the council, fought false witness.

The Stygian council thus dissolv'd; and forth
In order came the grand infernal peers.

In histories composed by politicians, they are for drawing up a perpetual scheme of causes and events, and preserving a constant correspondence between the camp and the council table.

2. Act of publick deliberation.

The scepter'd heralds call
To council in the city gates: anon
Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd, Assamble, and harangues are made.

3. An assembly of divines to deliberate upon religion.

Some borrow all their religion from the fathers of the Christian church, or from their synods or councils.

4. Persons called together to be consulted on any occasion, or to give advice.

They being thus assembled, are more properly a council to the king, the great council of the kingdom, to advise his majesty in those things of weight and difficulty, which concern both the king and people, than a court.

5. The body of privy counsellors.

Without the knowledge
Either of king or council, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.

CO'UNCIL-BOARD. n. f. [council and board.] Council-table; table where matters of state are deliberated.

He hath commanded.
To-morrow morning to the council-board
He be convened.

When ship-money was transacted in the council-board, they looked upon it as a work of that power they were obliged to trust.

And Pallas, if she broke the laws,
Must yield her foe the stronger cause;
A shame to one so much ador'd
For wisdom at Jove's council-board.

CO'UNSEL. n. f. [consilium, Latin.]

1. Advice; direction.

There is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer.

The best counsel he could give him was, to go to his parliament.

Bereave me not

Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel in this uttermost distress. Milton.

2. Consultation; interchange of opinions.
I hold as little counsel with weak fear
As you, or any Scot that lives.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

3. Deliberation; examination of consequences.
They all confers, therefore, in the working of that first cause, that counsel is used, reason followed, and a way observed. Hooker.

4. Prudence; art; machination.
O how comely is the wisdom of old men, and understanding and counsel to men of honour.

Ecclesiast. xxv. 5.

There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord. Prov. xxi. 30.

5. Secrecy; the secrets intrusted in consulting.
The players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Shakespeare.

6. Scheme; purpose; design. Not in use.
The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations.

Psal. xxxiii. 11.

O God from whom all holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works do proceed. Com. Prayer.

7. Those that plead a cause; the counsellors.
This seems only an abbreviation usual in conversation.

Your hand, a covenant; we will have these things set down by lawful counsel. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

For the advocates and counsel that plead, patience and gravity of learning is an essential part of justice; and an overspeaking judge is no well-tuned cymbal. Bacon.

What says my counsel learned in the law? Pope.

To COUNSEL. v. a. [counselor, Latin.]

1. To give advice or counsel to any person.

But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Would'st thou then counsel me to fall in love?

Shakespeare.

Truth shall nurse her;

Holy and heav'nly thoughts still counsel her.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

There is danger of being unfaithfully counsel'd, and more for the good of them that counsel than for him that is counsel'd. Bacon.

All fortune never crushed that man whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counsel'd my friends never to trust to her fairer side, though she seemed to make peace with them.

Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

He supports my poverty with his wealth, and I counsel and instruct him with my learning and experience. Taylor.

2. To advise any thing.

The lefs had been our shame,

The lefs his counsel'd crime which brands the Grecian name. Dryden's Fables.

COUNSELLABLE. adj. [from counsel.] Willing to receive and follow the advice or opinion of others.

Very few men of so great parts were more coun-sellable than he; so that he would seldom be in danger of great errors, if he would communicate his own thoughts to disquisition. Clarendon.

COUNSELLOR. n. f. [from counsel.] This should rather be written counsellor.

1. One that gives advice.

His mother was his counsellor to do wickedly.

2 Chr. xxii. 3.

She would be a counsellor of good things, and a comfort in cares. Wild. viii. 9.

Death of thy foul! Those linen-cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Confidant; bosom friend.

In such green palaces the first kings reign'd,
Slept in their shades, and angels entertain'd;
With such old counsellors they did advise,
And by frequenting sacred groves grew wise.

Walker.

3. One whose province is to deliberate and advise upon public affairs.

You are a counsellor,

And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Of counsellors there are two sorts: the first, counsellors noti, as I may term them; such are the prince of Wales, and others of the king's sons:
but the ordinary sort of counsellors are such as the king, out of a due consideration of their worth and abilities, and, withal, of their fidelity to his person and to his crown, calleth to be of council with him, in his ordinary government.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. One that is consulted in a case of law; a lawyer.

A counsellor bred up in the knowledge of the municipal and statute laws, may honestly inform a just prince, how far his prerogative extends.

Dryden's Fables.

COUNSELLORSHIP. n. f. [from counsellor.] The office or post of a privy counsellor.

Of the great offices and officers of the kingdom,
the most part are such as cannot well be severed from the counsellorship. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

To COUNT. v. a. [computo, Fr. compute, Lat.]

1. To number; to tell.

Here through this grate I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The vicious count their years; virtuous, their acts. Johnson.

For the preferments of the world, he that would reckon up all the accidents that they depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or to sum up infinity. South.

When men in sickness ling'ring lie,
They count the tedious hours by months and years.

Dryden.

Argos now rejoice, for Thebes lies low;
Thy slaughter'd sons now smile, and think they won.

When they can count more Theban ghosts than theirs. Dryden.

2. To preserve a reckoning.

Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others. Locke.

3. To reckon; to place to an account.

He believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. Gen. xv. 6.

Not barely the plowman's pains is to be counted into the bread we eat; the labour of those who broke the oxen, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

4. To esteem; to account; to reckon; to consider as having a certain character, whether good or evil.

When once it comprehendeth any thing above this, as the differences of time, affirmations, ne-gations, and contradictions in speech, we then count it to have some use of natural reason. Hooker.

Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Be-lial. 1 Sam. i.

Nor shall I count it heinous to enjoy
The public marks of honour and reward

Confer'd upon me. Milton's Agonistes.

You would not wish to count this man a foe!
In friendship, and in hatred, obstinate.

Phillips's Briton.

5. To impute to; to charge to.

All th' impossibilities, which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description, Shall sooner be. Roscoe's Ambitious Step-mother.

To COUNT. v. n. To found an account or scheme: with upon.

I think it a great error to count upon the genius of a nation as a standing argument in all ages. Swift.

COUNT. n. f. [compte, French; computus, Lat.]

1. Number.

That we up to your palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count.

Spenser's Epithal.

2. Reckoning; number summed.

By my count,
I was your mother much upon these years.

Shakespeare.

Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.

—Well, I know not
What counts hard fortune casts upon my face.

Shakespeare.

COUNT. n. f. [comite, French; comes, Latin.] A title of foreign nobility; supposed equivalent to an earl.

CO-UNTABLE. adj. [from count.] That which may be numbered.

The evils which you desire to be recounted are very many, and almost countable with those which were hidden in the basket of Pandora.

Spenser's Ireland.

CO-UNTENANCE. n. f. [contenance, French.]

1. The form of the face; the system of the features.

2. Air; look.

A made countenance about her mouth between smiling and frowning, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Sidney.

Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush,

Nor change my countenance for this arrest:
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

So spake our sire, and by his countenance seem'd Entering on studious thoughts abstruse. Milton.

To whom, with countenance calm, and soul
sedate,

Thus Turnus. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Calmness of look; composure of face.

She smil'd severe; nor with a troubled look,
Or trembling hand, the funeral present took;

Ev'n kept her countenance, when the lid remov'd,
Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd.

Dryden's Fables.

The two maxims of any great man at court are, always to keep his countenance, and never to keep his word. Swift.

4. Confidence of men; aspect of assurance: it is commonly used in these phrases in countenance, and out of countenance.

The night beginning to persuade some retiring place, the gentlewoman, even out of countenance before she began her speech, invited me to lodge that night with her father. Sidney.

We will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Their best friends were out of countenance, because they found that the imputations, which their enemies had laid upon them, were well grounded.

Clarendon.

Your examples will meet it at every turn, and put it out of countenance in every place; even in private corners it will soon lose confidence.

Spratt's Sermons.

If the outward profession of religion and virtue were once in practice and countenance at court, a good treatment of the clergy would be the necessary consequence. Swift.

If those preachers would look about, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep. Swift.

It is a kind of ill manners to offer objections to a fine woman, and a man would be out of countenance that should gain the superiority in such a contest:
a coquette logician may be rallied, but not contradicted. Addison's Freeholder.

It puts the learned in countenance, and gives them a place among the fashionable part of mankind.

Addison's Freeholder.

5. Kindness or ill-will, as it appears upon the face.

Yet the stout fairy, 'mongst the midst crowd,
Thought all their glory vain in knightly view,
And that great prince's too, exceeding proud,
That to strange knight no better countenance allow'd.

Spenser.

6. Patronage; appearance of favour; appearance on any side: support.

The church of Christ, which held that profession which had not the public allowance and countenance of authority, could not use the exercise of Christian religion but in private. Hooker.

His Majesty maintained an army here, to give strength and countenance to the civil magistrate.

Davies on Ireland.

Now then, we'll use
His countenance for the battle; which being done,

Vol. I. N^o. 11. 3 C Let

Let her who would be rid of him, devise His speedy taking off. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
This is the magistrate's peculiar province, to give countenance to piety and virtue, and to rebuke vice and profaneness. Atterbury.

7. Superficial appearance; show; resemblance.
The election being done, he made countenance of great discontent thereat. Shakespeare's Schoolmaster.

Oh, you blessed ministers above!

Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time
Unfold the evil, which is here wrapt up
In countenance. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Bianca's love

Made me exchange my state with Tranio,
While he did bear my countenance in the town.

Shakespeare.

To Co'UNTENANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support; to patronize; to vindicate.

Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause. Exodus.

This conceit, though countenanced by learned men, is not made out either by experience or reason. Brown.

This national fault of being so very talkative, looks natural and graceful in one that has grey hairs to countenance it. Addison.

2. To make a show of.

Each to these ladies love did countenance,

And to his mistress each himself strove to advance. Spenser.

3. To act suitably to any thing; to keep up any appearance.

Malcolm! Banquo!

As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprights,

To countenance this horror.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. To encourage; to appear in defence.

At the first descent on shore he was not im-mured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance
the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

Co'UNTENANCE. n. f. [from countenance.] One that countenances and supports another.

Co'UNTER. n. f. [from count.]

1. A false piece of money used as a means of reckoning.

Will you with counter sum

The vast proportion of his infinite? Shakespeare.

Though these half-pence are to be received as money in the Exchequer, yet in trade they are no better than counters.

Swift's Consideration on Wood's Coin.

2. Money in contempt.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,

To lock such rascal counters from his friends,

Be ready, Gods! with all your thunder-bolts,

Dash him to pieces. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

3. The table on which goods are viewed and money told in a shop.

A fine gaudy mix, that robs our counters every night; and then goes out, and spends it upon our cuckold-makers. Dryden.

In half-whipt muslin, needles uselefs lie;

And shuttle-cocks a-crofs the counter fly.

Guy's Trivia.

Sometimes you would see him behind his counter selling broad-cloth, sometimes measuring linen.

Arbutnot.

Whether thy counter shine with fums untold,

And thy wide-grasping hand grows black with gold. Swift.

4. Co'UNTER of a Horse, is that part of a horse's forehand that lies between the shoulder and under the neck. Farrier's Dict.

Co'UNTER. adv. [contra, Fr. contra, Latin.]

1. Contrary to; in opposition to; it is commonly used with the verb run, perhaps by a metaphor from the old tournaments.

Shall we erect two wills in God's, and make the will of his purpose and intention run counter to the will of his approbation? South.

The profit of the merchant, and the gain of the kingdom, are so far from being always parallels, that frequently they run counter one to the other.

Child on Trade.

He thinks it brave, at his first setting out, to signalize himself in running counter to all the rules of virtue. Locke.

2. The wrong way; contrarily to the right course.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry,

Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs!

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

3. Contrary ways.

A man whom I cannot deny, may oblige me to use persuasions to another, which, at the same time I am speaking, I may with may not prevail on him; in this case, it is plain the will and the desire run counter. Locke.

4. The face in opposition to the back. Not in use.

They hit one another with darts, as the other do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flyer. Samuel's Jour.

5. This word is often found in composition, and may be placed before either nouns or verbs used in a sense of opposition.

That design was no sooner known, but others of an opposite party were appointed to set a counter- petition on foot. Clarendon.

To Co'UNTERACT. v. a. [counter and act.] To hinder any thing from its effect by contrary agency.

In this case we can find no principle within him strong enough to counteract that principle, and to relieve him. South.

To Co'UNTERBALANCE. v. a. [counter and balance.] To weigh against; to act against with an opposite weight.

There was so much air drawn out of the vessel, that the remaining air was not able to counterbalance
the mercurial cylinder. Boyle.

Few of Adam's children are not born with some bias, which it is the business of education either to take off, or counterbalance. Locke.

Co'UNTERBALANCE. n. f. [from the verb.]
Opposite weight; equivalent power.

But peaceful kings, o'er martial people set,
Each other's poise and counterbalance are.

Dryden's An. Mirab.

Money is the counterbalance to all other things purchaseable by it, and lying, as it were, in the opposite scale of commerce. Locke.

To Co'UNTERBUFF. v. a. [from counter and buff.]
To impel in a direction opposite to the former impulse; to strike back.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides, Stann'd with the diff'rent blows; then shoots again,

'Till counterbuff'd the stops, and sleeps again. Dry

Co'UNTERBUFF. n. f. [counter and buff.] A blow in a contrary direction; a stroke that produces a recoil.

He at the second gave him such a counterbuff, that, because Phalantus was not to be driven from the saddle, the saddle with broken girths was driven from the horse. Sidney.

Go, Captain Stub, lead on, and show,

What house you come of, by the blow

You give, fir Quintin, and the cuff,

You 'scape o' th' sandbags counterbuff. Ben Jonson.

Co'UNTERCASTER. n. f. [from counter, for a false piece of money, and caster.] A word of contempt for an arithmetician; a book-keeper; a caster of accounts; a reckoner.

I, of whom his eyes had seen the proof

At Rhodes, at Cyprus, must be let and calm'd

By debtor and creditor, this countercaster.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Co'UNTERCHANGE. n. f. [counter and change.]
Exchange; reciprocation.

She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master, hitting

Each object with a joy. The counter change

Is fev'rally in all. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To Co'UNTERCHANGE. v. a. To give and receive.

Co'UNTERCHARM. n. f. [counter and charm.]
That by which a charm is dissolved; that which has the power of destroying the effects of a charm.

Now touch'd by countercharms they change again,
And stand majestick, and recall'd to men.

Pope's Odyssey.

To Co'UNTERCHARM. v. a. [from counter and charm.] To destroy the effect of an enchantment.

Like a spell it was to keep us invulnerable, and so countercharm all our crimes, that they should only be active to please, not hurt us. Decay of Pity.

To Co'UNTERCHECK. v. a. [counter and check.]
To oppose; to stop with sudden opposition.

Co'UNTERCHECK. n. f. [from the verb.] Stop;
rebuke.

If again I said his beard was not well cut, he would say I lie: this is called the countercheck quarrelsome. Shakespeare.

To Co'UNTERDRAW. v. a. [from counter and draw.] With painters, to copy a design or painting by means of a fine linen cloth, an oiled paper, or other transparent matter, whereon the strokes appearing through, are traced with a pencil.

Co'UNTEREVIDENCE. n. f. [counter and evidence.] Testimony by which the deposition of some former witness is opposed.

Sense itself detects its more palpable deceits by a counterevidence, and the more ordinary impostures feldom outlive the first experiments. Chambers.

We have little reason to question his testimony in this point, seeing it is backed by others of good credit, and all because there is no counterevidence, nor any witness that appears against it.

Gilmville's Scopsis.

To Co'UNTERFEIT. v. a. [counterfair, Fr.]

1. To copy with an intent to pass the copy for an original; to forge.

What art thou,

That counterfeits the person of a king?

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

It came into this priest's fancy to cause this lad to counterfeit and personate the second son of Edward IV. supposed to be murdered.

Bacon's Henry VII.

There have been some that could counterfeit the distance of voices, which is a secondary object of hearing, in such sort, as when they stand fast by you, you would think the speech came from afar off in a fearful manner. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Say, lovely dream, where couldst thou find Shadows to counterfeit that face? Waller.

It happens, that not one single line or thought is contained in this imposture, although it appears that they who counterfeited me had heard of the true
one. Swift.

2. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.

And, oh, you mortal engines, whose rude throats

Th' immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit, Farewel! Shakespeare's Othello.

O Eve! in evil hour thou didst give ear
To that false worm, of whomsoever taught

To counterfeit man's voice. Milton's Par. Lost.

To counterfeit, is to put on the likeness and appearance of some real excellency: Bristol-stones would not pretend to be diamonds, if there never had been diamonds. Tiltsen.

Co'UNTERFEIT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. That which is made in imitation of another, with intent to pass for the original; forged; fictitious.

I learn

Now of my own experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are, who friends

Bear in their superscription; in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head.

Milton.

General observations drawn from particulars, are the jewels of knowledge, comprehending great store in a little room; but they are therefore to be made with the greater care and caution, lest, if we take counterfeit for true, our shame be the greater, when our stock comes to a severe scrutiny. Locke.

2. Deceitful; hypocritical.

True friends appear less mov'd than counterfeit.

Rowson's

Coler.

Co'UNTERFEIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. One who personates another; an impostor.
I am no counterfeiter; to die is to be a counterfeiter; for he is but the counterfeiter of a man, who hath not the life of a man. Shakespeare.

This priest being utterly unacquainted with the true person, according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeiter, yet could think it possible for him to instruct his player, either in gesture or fashions, or in fit answers to questions, to come near the resemblance. Bacon.

But trust me, child, I'm much inclin'd to fear. Some counterfeiter in this your Jupiter. Addison's Ovid.
2. Something made in imitation of another, intended to pass for that which it resembles; a forgery.

My father was I know not where, When I was stamp'd. Some coiner with his tools, Made me a counterfeiter; yet my mother seem'd The Dian of that time. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

There would be no counterfeits but for the sake of something real! though pretenders seem to be what they really are not, yet they pretend to be something that really is. Tillotson.

Co'UNTERFEITER. n. f. [from counterfeiter.] A forger; one who contrives copies to pass for originals.

Henry the second altered the coin, which was corrupted by counterfeiters, to the great good of the commonwealth. Camden.

Co'UNTERFEITLY. adv. [from counterfeiter.] Falsely; fictitiously; with forgery.

Since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my cap than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

COUNTERFERMENT. n. f. [counter and ferment.] Ferment opposed to ferment.

What unnatural motions and counterferments must a medley of intemperance produce in the body! When I behold a fashionable table, I fancy I see innumerable distempers lurking in ambuscade among the dishes. Addison's Spectator.

COUNTERFESANCE. n. f. [counterfeisance, Fr.] The act of counterfeiting; forgery. Not in use.

To COUNTERMARK. v. a. [counter and mark.]

A horse is said to be countermarked when his corner teeth are artificially made hollow, a false mark being made in the hollow place, in imitation of the eye of a bean, to conceal the horse's age. Forrius's Dict.

COUNTERMINE. n. f. [counter and mine.]

1. A well or hole sunk into the ground, from which a gallery or branch runs out under ground, to seek out the enemy's mine and disappoint it. Military Dict.

After this they mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouths; but the citizens made a countermine, and thereinto they poured such a plenty of water, that the wet powder could not be fired. Hayward.

2. Means of opposition; means of counteraction.

He thinking himself contemned, knowing no countermine against contempt but terror, began to let nothing pass, which might bear the colour of a fault, without sharp punishment. Sidney.

3. A stratagem by which any contrivance is defeated.

The matter being brought to a trial of skill, the countermine was only an act of self-preservation. L'Estrange.

To COUNTERMINE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To delve a passage into an enemy's mine, by which the powder may evaporate without mischief.

2. To counterwork; to defeat by secret measures.

Thus infallibly it must be, if God do not miraculously countermine us, and do more for us than we can do against ourselves. Decay of Piety.

COUNTERMOTION. n. f. [counter and motion.] Contrary motion; opposition of motion.

That resistance is a counteremotion, or equivalent to one, is plain by this, that any body which is pressed, must needs press again on the body that presses it. Digby on the Soul.

If any of the returning spirits should happen to fall foul upon others which are outward bound, these counteremotions would overfet them, or occasion a later arrival. Collier.

COUNTERMURE. n. f. [contremure, French.] A wall built up behind another wall, to supply its place.

The great shot flying through the breach, did beat down houses; but the countermure, new built against the breach, standing upon a lower ground, it seldom touched. Knolles.

COUNTEROPENING. n. f. [counter and opening.] An aperture or vent on the contrary sides.

A tent, plugging up the orifice, would make the matter recur to the part disposed to receive it, and mark the place for a counteropening. Sharp's Surgery.

COUNTERPACE. n. f. [counter and pace.] Contrary measure, attempts in opposition to any scheme.

When the least counterpaces are made to these resolutions, it will then be time enough for our malecontents. Swift.

Co'UNTERPANE. n. f. [contrepoint, French.] A coverlet for a bed, or any thing else woven in squares. It is sometimes written, according to etymology, counterpoint.

In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns: In cypress chests my arras counterpanes. Shakespeare.

COUNTERPART. n. f. [counter and part.] The correspondent part; the part which answers to another, as the two papers of a contract; the part which fits another, as the key of a cipher.

In some things the laws of Normandy agreed with the laws of England; so that they seem to be, as it were, copies or counterparts one of another. Hale's Law of England.

An old fellow with a young wench, may pass for a counterpart of this fable. L'Estrange.

Oh counterpart

Of our soft sex; well are you made our lords: So bold, so great, so god-like are you form'd, How can you love so silly things as women? Dryden.

He is to consider the thought of his author, and his words, and to find out the counterpart to each in another language. Dryden.

In the discovery the two different plots look like counterparts and copies of one another. Addison's Spectator.

COUNTERPLEA. n. f. [from counter and plea.] In law, a replication: as if a stranger to the action begun, desire to be admitted to say what he can for the safeguard of his estate; that which the demandant allegeth against this request is called a counterplea. Cowell.

To COUNTERPLOT. v. a. [counter and plot.] To oppose one machination by another; to obviate art by art.

COUNTERPLOT. n. f. [from the verb.] An artifice opposed to an artifice.

The wolf that had a plot upon the kid, was confounded by a counterplot of the kid's upon the wolf; and such a counterplot as the wolf, with all his sagacity, was not able to smell out. L'Estrange.

Co'UNTERPOINT. n. f. A coverlet woven in squares, commonly spoken counterpane. See COUNTERPANE.

To COUNTERPOISE. v. a. [counter and poise.]

The heaviness of bodies must be counterpoised by a plummet, fastened about the pulley to the axis. Wilkins.

3. To act with equal power against any period or cause.

So many freeholders of English will be able to beard and to counterpoise the rest. Spenser on Ireland.

Co'UNTERPOISE. n. f. [from counter and poise.]

1. Equi-

3 C 2

1. Equiponderance; equivalence of weight; equal force in the opposite scale of the balance.

Take her by the hand,
And tell her she is thine; to whom I promise
A counterpoise, if not in thy estate,
A balance more replete.

Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
Fastening that to our exact balance, we put a metalline counterpoise into the opposite scale.

2. The state of being placed in the opposite scale of the balance.

Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd,
The pendulous round earth, with balanc'd air
In counterpoise.

3. Equipollence; equivalence of power.
The second nobles are a counterpoise to the higher nobility, that they grow not too potent.
Their generals, by their credit in the army, were, with the magistrates and other civil officers, a fort of counterpoise to the power of the people.

Swift.
COUNTERPOISON. n. f. [counter and poison.] Antidote; medicine by which the effects of poison are obviated.

Counterpoisons must be adapted to the cause; for example, in poison from sublimated corrosive, and arsenick.

COUNTERPRESSURE. n. f. [counter and pressure.] Opposite force; power acting in contrary directions.

Does it not all mechanick heads confound,
That troops of atoms from all parts around,
Of equal number, and of equal force,
Should to this single point direct their course;
That to the counterpressure ev'ry way,
Of equal vigour, might their motions stay,
And, by a steady poise, the whole in quiet lay?

Blackm.
COUNTERPROJECT. n. f. [counter and project.] Correspondent part of a scheme.

A clear reason why they never sent any forces to Spain, and why the obligation not to enter into a treaty of peace with France, until that entire monarchy was yielded as a preliminary, was struck out of the counterproject by the Dutch.

Swift.
To COUNTERPROVE. v. a. [from counter and prove.] To take off a design in black lead, or red chalk, by passing it through the rolling-press with another piece of paper, both being moistened with a sponge.

Chambers.

And give not thus the counter-time to fate.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.
COUNTERTURN. n. f. [counter and turn.]

The catastasis, called by the Romans status, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you.

Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.
To COUNTERVAIL. v. a. [contra and valen, Lat.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off.

Hooker.
And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;
Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,
And him with equal valour countervail'd.

Fairy Queen.
The outward streams, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending side does exceed the other.

Wilkins's Dedalus.
We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniences that go along with it.

L'Estrange.
COUNTERVAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.

2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surely, the present pleasure of a sinful act is a poor countervail for the bitterness of the review, which begins where the action ends, and lasts for ever.

South's Sermons.
COUNTERVIEW. n. f. [counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

Mean while, ere thus was fin'd and judg'd on earth

Within the gates of hell sat sin and death,

Milton's Paradise Lost.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in counter-view or contrast with that of the other company.

Swift.
To COUNTERWORK. v. a. [counter and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

But heaven's great view is one; and that the whole;

That counterworks each folly and caprice;
That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice.

Pop.
COUNTESS. n. f. [countess, Lat. comitissa, Fr.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the duchess of Norfolk.

—It is, and all the rest are countesses.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
It is the peculiar happiness of the countesses of Abingdon to have been so truly loved by you, while she was living; and so gratefully honoured after she was dead.

Dryden.
COUNTERING-HOUSE. n. f. [count and house.] The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags, cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them.

Co'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kifs for kifs,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O, were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Shakespeare.
But oh, her mind, that orcs which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses.

Donne.
By one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,

We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return.

Prior.
I see, I cry'd, his woes, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main.

Pope's Odyssey.
CO'UNTRY. n. f. [contrée, Fr. contra, latv Latin; supposed to be contracted from contrata.]

1. A tract of land; a region, as distinguished from other regions.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

Would I a house for happiness erect,
Nature alone should be the architect;

She'd build it more convenient than great,
And doubtless in the country chuse her seat.

Cowley.
I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country.

Spektor.
3. The place which any man inhabits, or in which he at present resides.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round,
Hang those that talk of fear.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
4. The place of one's birth; the native soil.

The king set on foot a reformation in the ornaments and advantages of our country.

Sparr.
O, save my country, heav'n shall be your last.

Fept.
5. The inhabitants of any region.

All the country, in a general voice,
Cry'd hate upon him: all their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Co'UNTRY. adj.

1. Rustick; rural; villatick.

Cannot a country wench know, that having received a shilling from one that owes her three, and a shilling also from another that owes her three, that the remaining debts in each of their hands are equal?

Locke.
I never meant any other, than that Mr. Trutt should confine himself to country dances.

Spator.
He comes no nearer to a positive, clear idea of a positive infinite, than the country fellow had of the water which was yet to pass the channel of the river where he stood.

Locke.
Talk but with country people, or young people, and you shall find that the notions they apply this name to, are so odd, that nobody can imagine they were taught by a rational man.

Locke.
A country gentleman, learning Latin in the university, removes thence to his mansion-house.

Locke.
The low mechanicks of a country town do somewhat out-do him.

Locke.
Come, we'll e'en to our country seat repair,
The native home of innocence and love.

Norris.
2. Of an interest opposite to that of courts; as, the country party.

3. Peculiar to a region or people.
She, laughing the cruel tyrant to scorn, spake in her country language.

2 Maccabees, viii. 27.
4. Rude; ignorant; untaught.

We make a country man dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar.

Dryden's Dunciad.
Co'UNTRYMAN. n. f. [from country and man.]

1. One

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground.

See, who comes here?

My countryman; but yet I know him not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Horace, great bard, so fate ordain'd, arose;
And bold as were his countrymen in fight,
Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,
And set their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman.

Addison on the War.

2. A rustic; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a boar in his corn.

L'Estrange.

COUNTY. n. f. [comitatus, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A shire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice; so that there is no part of the kingdom, but what lieth within some county. Every county is governed by an yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's court. Of these counties four are termed county palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice, as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court. Cowell.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties.

As we will ours. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless children. Addison.

2. An earldom.

3. [Comité.] A count; a lord. Now wholly obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman, The county Paris. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same ita liberè ad gladium fecit rex tenet Angliam ad coronam. Davies.

COUPPE. n. f. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

COUPLE. n. f. [couple, Fr. copula, Latin.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-stand where

I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her, Then when I feel and see no further trust her, Shakespeare.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in couples; they should be of the same size and humour. L'Estrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach myself and yours, I will provide; yea, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Milham.

A piece of chrysalis inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the couples three,

Ever true in loving be.

Shakespeare's Midsummer's Night's Dream.

Oh! alas!

I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth Might thus have flood, begetting wonder, as You gracious couple do.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted before they contract, to see one another naked.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

He said: the careful couple join their tears, And then invoke the gods with pious prayers.

Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley's Sermons.

To COUPLE. v. a. [copula, Latin.]

1. To chain together.

Huntman, I charge thee, tender well my bounds; And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakespeare.

2. To join one to another.

What greater ills have the heavens in store, To couple coming harms with forrow past. Sidney.
And wheresoe'er we went, like Juno's swans, Still we went coupled and inseparable.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one. Exod. xxvi. 11.
They behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. 1 Pet. iii. 2.

Their concernments were so coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religion would have made them brothers. South.

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reason, who is measuring syllables and coupling rhymes, when he should be mending his own soul, and securing his own immortality. Pope.

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock.

I shall rejoice to see you so coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your satisfaction. Sidney.

I am just going to assist with the archbishop, in degrading a parson who couples all our beggars, by which I shall make one happy man. Swift.

To COUPLE. v. n. To join in embraces.

Waters in Africa being rare, divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and so being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon.

Thou, with thy lusty crew, Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men, And coupled with them, and begot a race.

Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

The great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of brutes of several species, at water, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

After this alliance, Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep, And every creature couple with his foe.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. f. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land,

E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

COUPLET. n. f. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhymes.

Then would they cast away their pipes, and, holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would use in singing some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney.

Then at the last, an only couple fraught With some unmeaning thing they call a thought; A needless Alexandrine ends the song, That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,

But with a sigh I wish it mine:

When he can in one couplet fix

More sense than I can do in six,

It gives me such a jealous fit,

I cry, pox take him and his wit. Swift.

2. A pair; as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove, Ere that her golden couplets are disclosed His silence will sit drooping. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
CO'URAGE. n. f. [courage, Fr. from cor, Latin.] Bravery; active fortitude; spirit of enterprise.

The king-becoming graces, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude; I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Their discipline

Now mingled with their courage.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Hope arms their courage: from their towers they throw

Their darts with double force, and drive the foe. Dryden.

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason. Addison's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortunes. Swift.

COURAGEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall flee away naked in that day. Amos ii. 16.

Let us imitate the courageous example of St. Paul, who chose then to magnify his office when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury.

2. It is used ludicrously by Shakespeare for outrageous.

He is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water. Shakespeare.

COURAGEOUSLY. adv. [from courageous.] Bravely; stoutly; boldly.

The king the next day presented him battle upon the plain, the fields there being open and champaign: the earl courageously came down, and joined battle with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

COURAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from courageous.] Bravery; boldness; spirit; courage.

Davies on Ireland.

He placed commissioners there, who governed it only in a course of discretion, part martial, part civil.
Davies on Ireland.

Give willingly what I can take by force;
And know obedience is your safest course.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

But if a right course be taken with children, there will not be so much need of common rewards and punishments.
Locke.

'Tis time we should decree
What course to take.
Addison's Cato.
The senate observing how, in all contentions, they were forced to yield to the tribunes and people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to time.
Swift.

13. Method of life; train of actions.
A woman of so working a mind, and so vehement spirits, as it was happy she took a good course; for otherwise it would have been terrible.
Sidney.

His addition was to courses vain;
His companies, unletter'd, rude and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

As the dropsy-man, the more he drinks, the drier he is, and the more he still desires to drink; even so a sinner, the more he sins, the apter is he to sin, and more desirous to keep still a course in wickedness.
Perkins.

Men will say,
That beautiful Emma vagrant courses took,
Her father's house and civil life forsook.
Prior.
14. Natural bent; uncontrolled will.
It is best to leave nature to her course, who is the sovereign physician in most diseases.
Temple.

So every servant took his course,
And, bad at first, they all grew worse.
Prior.

15. Catamenia.
The stoppage of women's *course*s, if not suddenly looked to, sets them undoubtedly into a consumption, dropy, or some other dangerous disease.
Harvey on Consumptions.

Harris.

18. Series of consequences.
19. Number of dishes set on at once upon the table.

Worthy sir, thou bleed'st:
Thy exercise hath been too violent,
For a second course of fight. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
Then with a second course the tables load,
And with full charges offer to the god.
Dryden's Æneid.

You are not to wash your hands 'till after you have sent up your second course.
Swift's Directions to the Cook.

So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear
Sancho's dread doctor and his wand was there.
Pope.

20. Regularity; settled rule.
21. Empty form.

Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none; their vows and promises are no more than words of course.
L'Estrange.

22. Of course. By consequence.
With a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me.
Locke.

23. Of course. By settled rule.
Sense is of course annex'd to wealth and power;
No muse is proof against a golden show'r. Garth.
Neither shall I be so far wanting to myself, as not to desire a patent, granted of course to all useful projectors.
Swift.

TO COURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To hunt; to pursue.

The big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase. Shakespeare's As you like it.
The king is hunting the deer: I am coursing myself.

Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.
It would be tried also in flying of hawks, or in coursing of a deer, or hart, with greyhounds.
Bacon's Natural History.

I am continually starting hares for you to course: we were certainly cut out for one another; for my temper quits an amour just where thine takes it up.
Congreve's Old Bachelor.

3. To put to speed; to force to run.
When they have an appetite
To venery, let them not drink nor eat,
And course them oft, and tire them in the heat.
May's Virgil.

TO COURSE. v. n. To run; to rove about.
Swift as quicksilver it courses through
The nat'ral gates and allies of the body.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherries warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme.
Shakespeare, Henry IV.

She did so course o'er my exterior with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair.
Lydell.

All, at once
Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend
And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
All either coursing in a maze of light.
Thomson's Autumn.

CO'URSER. n. f. [from course; coursier, Fr.]
1. A swift horse; a war horse: a word not used in prose.

He proudly pricketh on his coursier strong,
And Atin ay him pricks with spurs of shame and wrong.
Spenser.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of coursers born of heavenly breed;
Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire.
Dryden's Æneid.

Th' impatient coursier pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.
Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of courting hares.
A leath is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a coursier leads his greyhound.
Hammer.

COURT. n. f. [cour, Fr. kort, Dut. court, low Lat.]

1. The place where the prince resides; the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; Epicurism and lust,
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare, King Lear.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.
Isaiah, xxvi. 13.

His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one.
Prior's Dedication.

A suppliant to your royal court I come.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakespeare.

St. Paul being brought unto the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached, concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state.
Atterbury.

3. Open space before a house.
You must have, before you come to the front, three courts: a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished, with little turrets, or other embellishments upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall.
Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragely must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him), for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken.
Dryden.

4. A small opening inclosed with houses and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince. Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them.
Temple.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the wall, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The

The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable.

I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron, held in that behalf.

Spekato.
8. The art of pleasing; the art of infatuation.
Him the prince with gentle court did board.

Spenser.
Hast thou been never bafe? Did love ne'er bend
Thy frailer virtue, to betray thy friend?
Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.
Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves.

Locke.
I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers:
the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing.

Swift to Gay.
9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it flies you;

Seem to fly it, it will pursue:

So court a mistress, she denies you;

Let her alone, she will court you.

Ben Jonson's Forcell.
Pir'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed.

Dryden's Æneid.
Alas! Sempronius, would'st thou talk of love
To Marcia, whilst her father's life is in danger?
Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling
vestal,

While she beholds the holy flame expiring.

Addison's Cato.
Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all their gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.

Pope.
2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.

Locke on Education.
3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-CHAPLAIN. n. f. [court and chaplain.]

next court-day he spoke.

Artfulsat and Pope.
COURT-DRESSER. n. f. [court and dresser.] One that dresses the court, or persons of rank; a flatterer.

There are many ways of fallacy; such arts of giving colours, appearances, and resemblances, by this court-dresser, fancy.

Locke.
COURT-FAVOUR. n. f. Favours or benefits bestowed by princes.

We part with the blessings of both worlds for pleasures, court-favours, and commissions; and at last, when we have sold ourselves to our lusts, we grow sick of our bargain.

L'Estrange.
COURT-HAND. n. f. [court and hand.] The hand or manner of writing used in records and judicial proceedings.

He can make obligations, and write court-hand.

Shakespeare.
COURT-LADY. n. f. [court and lady.] A lady conversant or employed in court.

The same study, long continued, is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes or fashion is to a court-lady.

Locke.
COURTEOUS. adj. [cortois, French.] Elegant of manners; polite, well-bred; full of acts of respect.

He hath deserved worthily of his country;

and his ascent is not by such easy degrees, as those who have been supple and courteous to the people.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
They are one while courteous, civil, and obliging; but, within a small time after, are superci-ous, tharp, troublesome, fierce, and excepti-ous.

South.
COURTEOUSLY. adv. [from courteous.] Respectfully; civilly; complaisantly.

He thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits bewrayed, yet he let them courteously pass.

COURTEZAN. f. woman of the town; a prostitute; a strumpet.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtesan.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
With them there are no stewes, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind;
nay, they wonder, with detestation, at you, in Europe, which permit such things.

Bacon's New Atlantis.
The Corinthian is a column, lasciviously decked like a courtesan.

Wotton.
Charixus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her.

Addison.
COURTESY. n. f. [cortoisie, French, cortesia, Italian.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers.

Peucham.
He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen.

Clarendon.
Courtesy is sooner found in lowly shades
With smoky rafters, than in tap'ry halls,
And courts of princes, whence it first was nam'd.

Milton.
So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.

Dryden's Fables.
2. An act of civility or respect.

You spurn'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Repose you there, while I to the hard house
Return, and force their scant courtesy.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
When I was last at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For heav'n to earth some of us never shall
A second time do such a court fy.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.

Bacon.
3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl, scarce to a court fy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train.

Dryden's Juvenal.
The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is, I endeavour to make her look something Christian-like.

Congreve's Old Bachelor.
4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of other's; as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which,
if a man marry an inheritance, that is, a woman seised of land, and getteth a child of her that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith; yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Anglice, or by the courtesy of England.

Cowel.
To COURTESY. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To perform an act of reverence: it is now only used of women.

Toby approaches, and courtesies there to me

Shakespeare.
The petty traffickers,
That courtesy to them, do them reverence.

Shakespeare.
2. To make a reverence in the manner of ladies.

If I should meet her in my way,
We hardly courtesy to each other.

Prior.
COURTIER. n. f. [from court.]
1. One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier he swears.—
If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taylor's; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Shakespeare's As you like it.
You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
You know I am no courtier, nor verfed in state-affairs.

Bacon.
The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of his attendants.

Dryden.
2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

What
Made thee, all honour'd honest Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the capitol?

Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.
There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard III. not out of fear, but wisdom.

Suckling.
COURTLING. n. f. [from court.] A courtier;
a retainer to a court.

Counting. I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily.

Ben Jonson.
COURTINE. See CURTAIN.
COURTLIKE. adj. [court and like.] Elegant;
polite.

Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian.

Camden's Remains.
COURTLINESS. n. f. [from courtly.] Elegance of manners: grace of mein; complaisance; civility.

The slightest part that you excel in, is courtliness.

Lord Digby to Sir Kenelm Digby.
COURTLY. adv. [from court.] Relating or retaining to the court; elegant; soft; flattering.

In our own time (excuse some courtly strains,)
No whiter page than Addison's remains.

Pope.
COURTLY. adv. In the manner of courts;
elegantly.

He paid his courtship with the crowd,
As far as modest pride allow'd.

Swift.
2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

COW

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair objects of love,
As shall conveniently become you there.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
In tedious courtship we declare our pain,
And ere we kindness find, first meet disdain.

Dryden's Ind. Emp.
Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's holiday suit.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.

My courtship to an university,

My modesty I give to soldiers bare;

My patience to a gamester's share.

Domie.
COUSIN. n. f. [cousin, Fr. consanguineus, Lat.]

1. Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or sister.

Macbeth unseam'd him.

Oh, valliant cousin! worthy gentleman.

Tybalt, my cousin! O, my brother's child!

Unhappy fight! alas, the blood is spill'd

Of my dear kinsman.

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,

And cousin german to great Priam's feed.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cr. fida.

2. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

COW. n. f. [in the plural, anciently kin, or keen, now commonly cows; cu, Sax. ku, Dutch.]

The female of the bull; the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, for the most part, are larger than the bulls; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth.

After the fever is diminished, asses and goats milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cows milk alone.

Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He sought himself some hospitable house:
Good Cretan entertain'd his godlike guest.

To Cow. v. a. [from coward, by contraction.]
To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mothers womb

Untimely ripp'd.—

—Accursed be that tongue that tells me fo;
For it hath cow'd my better part of man.

By reason of their frequent revolts they have drawn upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seems to have somewhat cow'd their spirits.

For when men by their wives are cow'd,
Their horns of course are understood.

COW-HERD. n. f. [cow and herd, Sax. a keeper.]
One whose occupation is to tend cows.

COW-HOUSE. n. f. [cow and house.] The house in which kine are kept.

You must house your milch-cows, that you give hay to in your cow-house, all night.

COW-LEECH. n. f. [cow and leech.] One who professes to cure distempered cows.

To COW-LEECH. v. n. To profess to cure cows.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant, especially in the country.

COW-WEED. n. f. [cow and weed.] A species of chervil.

COW-WHEAT. n. f. [from cow and wheat.] A plant.

COWARD. n. f. [coward, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltron; a wretch whose predominant pa-sion is fear.

Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Musidorus to courage, though he had been born a coward.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face.

Cæsar knowing him to be but a coward, told him,
You were best take heed, next time you run away,
how you look back.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace,
but sometimes also loses his life.

Tremble ye not, Oh friends! and cowards fly,
Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die!

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew;
And rais'd the house with loud and coward cries.

Invading fears repel my coward joy,
And ill foreseen the present bliss destroy.

CO'WARDICE. n. f. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, sir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead;
And with foul cowardice his carcass shame,
Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name.

Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroic valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame:

The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own.

rous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly.
Not in use.

It is the cowards terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrong,
Which tie him to an answer.

CO'WKEEPER. n. f. [cow and keeper] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language.

COWL. n. f. [cugle, Saxon; cucullus, Lat.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, faint Francis with his fiery cowl in a cornfield.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?

I'll tell you, friend, a wife man and a fool.

2. [Perhaps from cool, cooler, a vessel in which hot liquor is set to cool.] A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

COWL-STAFF. n. f. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,
Which (tossing him something high)

He apprehended to be Pegafus.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster.

CO'WSLIP. n. f. [paralytic; cuplippe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture-grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of primrose.

He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I:

In a cowslip's bell I lie.

Thy little sons
Permit to range the pastures: gladly they Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet.

COWS-LUNGWORT. n. f. A species of Mullen.

CO'XCOMB. n. f. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

As the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' the patty alive; she rapt them o' th' ex-combs with a stick, and cried down, wantons, down!

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps.

There take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb.

3. A top; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I lent to her,
By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,
Tokens and letters, which she did refund.

I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb folly,
Quarter or council from a foe.

It is a vanity for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his bet-ters.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so scandalous a name.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcombs, nature meant but fools.

4. A kind of red flower.

COXCOMICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish;
conceited: a low word unworthy of use.

Because as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds.

Our dame sits cow'ring o'er a kitchen fire;
I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire.

CO'WISH. adj. [from To cow, to awe.] Timo-

COY. adj. [coi, French; from quietus, Lat.]
1. Modest; decent.

Jafon is as coy as is a maide;

He looked piteously, but nought he said.

Chaucer.

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight she saw he light did pass,

A foe of folly and immodest toy;

Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy. Spenser.

Like Phœbus sung the no less am'rous boy:

Like Sappho she, as lovely and as coy. Waller.

At this season every smile of the fun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon.

Pope.

The Nile's coy source.

Grainger.

To COY. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, coying it again;

No more; but make me happy to my gulf,

That is, without your struggling.

Dryden's King Arthur.

Retire! I beg you, leave me.—

—Thus to coy it!

With one who knows you too!

Roscoe's Jane Shore.

2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

If he coy'd

To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To COY. v. a. [for decoy.] To allure. Not in use.

I'll mountebank their loves,

Coy their hearts from them, and come home beloved

Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

CO'VLY. adv. [from coy.] With reserve; with disinclination to familiarity.

This said; his hand he coyly snatcht away

From forth Antinous' hand.

Chapman's Odyssey.

CO'YNESS. n. f. [from coy.] Reserve; unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun hath warmed the earth and water, three or four male carps will follow a female; and the putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags.

Walton.

When the kind nymph would coyness feign,

And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

COYSTREL. n. f. A species of degenerate hawk. One they might trust, their common wrongs to wreak:

The musquet and the coystrel were too weak, Too fierce the falcon. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

COZ. n. f. A cant or familiar word, contracted from cousin.

Be merry, coz; since fadden sorrow

Serves to say thus, some good things come to-morrow. Shakespeare.

To CO'ZEN. v. a. [To coze is in the old Scotch dialect, as Junius observes, to chop or change; whence cozen, to cheat, because in such traffick there is commonly fraud.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so fully, let the muster-master view them never so diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenser.

Goring loving no man so well but that he would cozen him, and expose him to publick mirth for having been cozen'd. Clarendon.

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same thing with him that maliciously and corruptly sets himself to cozen it. L'Estrange.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Dryden.

What if I please to lengthen out his date,

A day, and take a pride to cozen fate.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Children may be cozen'd into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport. Locke on Education.

CO'ZENAGE. n. f. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat; the practice of cheating.

They say this town is full of cozenage, As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye, Disguised cheaters. Shakespeare.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage, and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call, It is mere cozenage all,

For though some long ago

Lik'd certain colours mingl'd to and fro,

That doth not tie me now from choosing new. Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits without the least suspicion of their cozenage. Glanville's Scipio.

Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain; And from the dregs of life think to receive

What the first sprightly running could not give. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

But all these are trifles, if we consider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Swift.

CO'ZENER. n. f. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

CRA. n. f. [cpabba, Sax. krabbe, Dutch.] 1. A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell are, the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. The old shells are never found; so as it is like they scale off and crumble away by degrees. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fox catches crab fish with his tail, which Olaus Magnus saith he himself was an eye-witness of. Derham.

2. A wild apple; the tree that bears a wild apple.

Noble stock

Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakespeare.

Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl, Then nightly sings the staring owl. Shakespeare.

Tell why a graft, taking nourishment from a crab stock, shall have a fruit more noble than its nurse and parent. Taylor.

3. A peevish morose person.

4. A wooden engine with three claws for launching of ships, or heaving them into the dock. Philips.

5. The sign in the zodiack.

Then parts the Twins and Crab, the Dog divides, And Argo's keel, that broke the frothy tides. Crab.

CRA. adj. It is used by way of contempt for any four or degenerate fruit; as a crab cherry; a crab plum.

Better gleanings their worn foil can boast, Than the crab vintage of the neighb'ring coast. Dryden.

CRA'BRED. adj. [from crab.]

1. Peevish; morose; cynical; sour.

A man of years, yet fresh, as mote appear, Of fwarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,

That him full of melancholy did shew. Spenser.

O, she is

Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed; And he's compos'd of harshness. Shakespeare's Tempest.

2. Harsh; unpleasing.

That was when

Three crabbed months had four'd themselves to death,

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand, And clepe thyself my love. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

How charming is divine philosophy!

Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose, But musical as is Apollo's lute,

And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets, Where no crude surfeit reigns. Milton.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher, And had read ev'ry text and glofs over;

Whate'er the crabbed author hath, He understood b' implicit faith. Hudibras.

Lucretius had chosen a subject naturally crabbed. Dryden.

Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius, Are against Gods, you know. Prior.

CRABS-EYES. n. f. Whitish bodies, rounded on one side and depressed on the other, heavy, moderately hard, and without smell. They are not the eyes of any creature, nor do they belong to the crab; but are produced by the common crawfish: the stones are bred in two separate bags, one on each side of the stomach. They are alkaline, absorbent, and in some degree diuretick. Hill.

Several persons had, in vain, endeavour'd to store themselves with crabs-eyes. Boyle.

CRACK. n. f. [crack, Dutch.]

1. A sudden disruption, by which the parts are separated but a little way from each other.

2. The chink, fissure, or vacuity made by disruption; a narrow breach.

Contusions, when great, do usually produce a fissure or crack of the skull, either in the same part where the blow was inflicted, or in the contrary part. Wiseham.

At length it would crack in many places; and those cracks, as they dilated, would appear of a pretty good, but yet obscure and dark sky-colour. Newton's Opticks.

3. The sound of any body bursting or falling.

If I say sooth, I must report, they were As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Now day appears, and with the day the king, Whose early care had robb'd him of his rest;

Far off the cracks of falling houses ring, And shrieks of subjects pierce his tender breast. Dryden.

4. Any sudden and quick sound.

A fourth?—start eye!

What will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom? Shakespeare.

Vulcan was employed in hammering out thunderbolts, that every now and then flew out from the anvil with dreadful cracks and flashes. Addison.

benumb and cramp them, so that in them they can neither speak nor do any thing that is handsome.
Glanville's Sceptis.

He, who serves, has still restraints of dread upon his spirits, which, even in the midst of action, cramps and ties up his activity. South's Sermons.

Dr. Hammond loves to contract and cramp the sense of prophecies. Burnet's Theory.

The antiquaries are for cramping their subjects into as narrow a space as they can, and for reducing the whole extent of a science into a few general maxims. Addison on Italy.

Marius used all endeavours for depressing the nobles, and raising the people; particularly for cramping the former in their power of judicature.
Swift.

No more
Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold,
But full of life, and vivifying soul.
Thomson's Spring.

3. To bind with crampirons.

CRAMPISH. n. f. [from cramp and fish.] The torpedo, which benumbs the hands of those that touch it.

CRAMPIRON. n. f. [from cramp and iron.] See CRAMP, Sense 3.

CRANAGE. n. f. [cranagium, low Latin.] A liberty to use a crane for drawing up wares from the vessels, at any creek of the sea or wharf, unto the land, and to make profit of it. It signifies also the money paid and taken for the fame. Cowell.

CRANE. n. f. [cran, Sax. kraen, Dut.]

1. A bird with a long beak.

Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter. Isa.

That small infantry warr'd on by cranes. Milton.

2. An instrument made with ropes, pulleys, and hooks, by which great weights are raised.

In case the mould about it be so ponderous as not to be removed by any ordinary force, you may then raise it with a crane. Mortimer.

Then commerce brought into the publick walk
The busy merchant, the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson's Autumn.

3. A siphon; a crooked pipe for drawing liquors out of a cask.

CRANES-BILL. n. f. [from crane and bill.]

1. An herb.

2. A pair of pincers terminating in a point, used by surgeons.

CRANIUM. n. f. [Latin.] The skull.

In wounds made by confusion, when the cranium is a little naked, you ought not presently to crowd in dossils; for if that contused flesh be well digested, the bone will incarn with the wound without much difficulty. Wifeman's Surgery.

CRANK. n. f. [This word is perhaps a contraction of cravenck, to which it may bear some resemblance, and is part of the instrument called a crane.]

1. A crank is the end of an iron axis turned square down, and again turned square to the first turning down; so that on the last turning down, a leathern thong is flit to tread the treadle-wheel about. Maxon.

2. Any bending or winding passage.

I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart; to th' seat o' th'
brain;

And through the cranks and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that natural competency,
Whereby they live. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Any conceit formed by twisting or changing, in any manner, the form or meaning of a word.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek. Milton.

CRANK. adj. [from oncrank, Dutch, Skinner.]

1. Healthy; sprightly: sometimes corrupted to cranky. Not in use.

They looken bigge, as bulls that been bate,
And bearen the crag so stiff and so state,
As cockle, on his dunghill crowing cranks.
Spenser.

2. Among sailors, a ship is said to be crank, when, by the form of her bottom, or by being loaded too much above, she is liable to be overfet.
[from crank, Dut. sick.]

To CRANKLE. v. n. [from crank, as it signifies something bent.] To run in and out; to run in flexures and windings.

See how this river comes me crankling in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land,
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

To CRANKLE. v. a. To break into unequal surfaces; to break into angles.

Old Vaga's stream,
Forc'd by the sudden shock, her wonted track
Ferook, and drew her humid train aslope, Crankling her banks. Philips.

CRANKLES. n. f. [from the verb.] Inequalities; angular prominences.

CRANKNESS. n. f. [from crank.]

1. Health; vigour.

2. Disposition to overfet.

CRANNIED. adj. [from cranny.] Full of chinks.

A wall it is, as I would have you think,
That had in it a crannied hole or chink.
Shakespeare.

A very fair fruit, and not unlike a citron; but somewhat rougher chopt and crannied, vulgarly conceived the marks of Adam's teeth.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CRANNY. n. f. [cran, Fr. crena, Latin.] A chink; a cleft; a fissure.

The eye of the understanding is like the eye of the sense; for as you may see great objects through small crannies or holes, so you may see great axioms of nature through small and contemptible instances
Bacon's Natural History.

And therefore beat, and laid about,
To find a cranny to creep out. Hudibras.

In a firm building, the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, but with brick or stone, fitted to the crannies. Dryden.

C R A

Within the soaking of water and springs, with streams and currents in the veins and crannies.

He skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garrets, and he peeped into every cranny.

CRAPE. n. f. [crapa, low Latin.] A thin stuff, loosely woven, of which the drefs of the clergy is sometimes made.

And proud Roxana, fir'd with jealous rage, With fifty yards of craps shall sweep the stage.

To thee I often call'd in vain, Against that assassin in craps.

'Tis from high life high characters are drawn; A faint in craps, is twice a faint in lawn.

CRA'PULENC. n. f. [crapula, a furfeit, Latin.] Drunkenness; sickness by intemperance.

CRA'PULOUS. adj. [crapulosus, Lat.] Drunken; intemperate; sick with intemperance.

TO CRASH. v. n. [a word probably formed from the thing.] To make a loud complicated noise, as of many things falling or breaking at once.

There shall be a great crashing from the hills.

When convulsions cleave the lab'ring earth, Before the dismal yawn appears, the ground Trembles and heaves, the nodding houses crash.

TO CRASH. v. a. To break or bruise.

My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montague, I pray you come and crash a cup of wine.

Mr. Warburton has it, crash a cup of wine.

TO CRASH, says Hamlet, is to be merry: a crash being a word still used in some counties for a merry bout.

It is surely better to read crack. See CRACK.

CRASH. n. f. [from the verb.] A loud sudden mixed sound, as of many things broken at the same time.

Senfeless Ilium,

Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top Stoops to his base; and, with a hideous crash, Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Moralizing fat I by the hazard-table: I look'd upon the uncertainty of riches, the decay of beauty, and the crash of worlds, with as much contempt as ever Plato did.

CRASS. n. f. [crassus, Lat.] Temperature; constitution arising from the various properties of humours.

The fancies of men are so immediately diversified by the individual crass, that every man owns something wherein none is like him.

A man may be naturally inclined to pride, lust, and anger, as these inclinations are founded in a peculiar crass, and constitution of the blood and spirits.

CRASS. adj. [crassus, Lat.] Gross; coarse; not thin; not comminuted; not subtle; not consisting of small parts.

Iron, in aquafortis, will fall into ebullition, with noise and emication; as also a crass and fumid exhalation caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis.

Metals are intermixed with the common terrestrial matter, so as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, so diffused and scattered amongst the crass and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it.

CRASSITUDE. n. f. [crassitudo, Lat.] Grossness; coarseness; thickness.

They must be but thin, as a leaf, or a piece of paper or parchment; for if they have a greater crassitude, they will alter in their own body, though they spend not.

The Dead Sea, which vomiteth up bitumen, is of that crassitude, as living bodies, bound hand and foot, cast into it, have been born up, and not sunk.

The terrestrial matter carried by rivers into the sea, is sustained therein partly by the greater crassitude and gravity of the sea-water, and partly by its constant agitation.

CRASSITUDE. n. f. [from cras, Latin, tomorrow.] Delay.

CRATCH. n. f. [crache, French; crates, Latin.] The palifaded frame in which hay is put for cattle.

When being expelled out of Paradise, by reason of sin, thou wert held in the chains of death; I was inclosed in the virgin's womb, I was laid in the cratch, I was wrapped in swathing-cloaths.

CRAVAT. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.] A neck-cloth; any thing worn about the neck.

Less delinquents have been scourg'd, And hemp on wooden anvils forg'd;

Which others for cravats have worn About their necks, and took a turn.

The restrictives were applied, one over another, to her throat: then we put her on a cravat.

TO CRAVE. v. a. [crapan, Saxon.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved at God's hands?

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons; But for the mutable rank-scented many, Let them regard me as I do not flatter.

The poor people not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed.

I would crave leave here, under the word action, to comprehend the forbearance too of any action proposed.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves, Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves.

2. To ask infatigably.

The subjects arm'd; the more their princes gave,

Th' advantage only took the more to crave.

Him dost thou mean, who spite of all his store, Is ever craving, and will still be poor?

Who cheats for halfpence; and who doffs his coat, To save a farthing in a ferry-boat?

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pushes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and satiety.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it by some wicked action.

4. To call for importunately.

Your needful counsel to our business, Which crave the instant use.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution, are acids taken in too great quantities; four eruptions, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love, But more would prove,

This heart too little, that too great.

CRA'VEN. n. f. [derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.]

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a coxcomb? — A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.

—No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.

2. A coward; a recreant; a weak-hearted spiritless fellow.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath? — He is a craven and a villain elfe.

C R A

Cranmer

Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

4. To move about hated and despised.
Reflect upon that litter of absurd opinions that crawl about the world, to the disgrace of reason.

How will the condemned sinner then crawl forth, and appear in his filth, before that undefiled tribunal? South.

Behold a reverend fire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameless race, Crawl through the street, shov'd on, or rudely
prefs'd.

By his own fons, that pass him by unblest! Pope.
CRAWLER. n. f. [from crawl.] A creeper;
any thing that creeps.

CRAWFISH. n. f. [See CRAWFISH.] The river lobster.

The cure of the muritick and armoniack salt-ness requires slimy meats; as snails, tortoises, jellies, and crawfishes. Floyer.

CRA'YON. n. f. [crayon, French.]
1. A kind of pencil; a roll of paste to draw lines with.

Let no day pass over you without drawing a line; that is to say, without working, without giving some strokes of the pencil or the crayon.

2. A drawing or design done with a pencil or crayon. Dryden's Dufrigny.

TO CRA'YZE. v. a. [ecraiser, French, to break to pieces.]

1. To break; to crush; to weaken.
In this consideration the answer of Calvin unto Farrel, concerning the children of popish parents, doth seem crazed. Hooker.

Relent, sweet Herminia; and, Lysander, yield Thy crazed title to my certain right. Shakespeare.

'Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness craze my limbs. Milton.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
And craze their chariot wheels. Milton.

2. To powder.
The tin ore passeth to the crazing mill, which,
between two grinding stones, bruleth it to a fine sand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain, to impair the intellect.
I lov'd him, friend,
No father his son dearer, true, to tell thee,
That grief hath craz'd my wits.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction; and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits, only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does.

Tillotson.
CRA'ZEDNESS. n. f. [from crazed.] Decrepitude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present; is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker.

CRA'ZINESS. n. f. [from crazy.]
1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakness.

Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [ecrazé, French.]
1. Broken; decrepit.

Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place;
Fitter for sickness and for crazy age.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
When people are crazy, and in disorder, it is natural for them to groan. L'Estrange.

2. Broken witted; shattered in the intellect.
The queen of night, whose large command
Rules all the sea and half the land,
And over moift and crazy brains,
In high spring-tides at midnight reigns. Hudibras.

C R E

3. Weak; feeble; shattered.

Physick can but mend our crazy state,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryd.

Were it possible that the near approaches of eternity, whether by a mature age, a crazy constitution, or a violent sickness, should amaze so many, had they truly considered. Wake.

CREAGHT. n. f. [an Irish word.]

In these fast places, they keep their creaghts, or herds of cattle, living by the milk of the cow, without husbandry or tillage. Davies on Ireland.

TO CREAGHT. v. n.

It was made penal in the English to permit the Irish to creaght or graze upon their lands, or present them to ecclesiastical benefices.

Davies on Ireland.
TO CREAK. v. n. [corrupted from crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.
Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of filks, betray thy poor heart to women.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.
The creaking locusts with my voice conspire,
They fry'd with heat, and I with fierce desire.

Dryden.
CREAM. n. f. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.

Shakespeare.
I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Cream is matured and made to rise speedily, by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

How the drudging goblin swet,
To earn his cream-bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn.

Mil.
Let your various creams incircled be
With swelling fruit, just ravish'd from the tree.

King.
Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream, and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor called skimmed milk.

Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. It is used for the best part of any thing; as,
the cream of a jest.

TO CREAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather cream.

There are a sort of men whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stiffness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
TO CREAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To skim off the cream.
2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing: so used somewhere by Swift.

CREAM-FACED. adj. [cream and faced.] Pale;

fine small line, fastened to a hawk's leath, when he is first lured.

CREASE. n. f. [from creta, Latin, chalk. Skinner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: I once desired lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas, a sharp penknife would go out of the crease, and disfigure the paper. Swift.

C R E

in a new state.

The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron.

Davies on Ireland.
CREA'TION. n. f. [from create.]

1. The act of creating or conferring existence.
Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence; in his creation, in his conservation of us. Taylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character: as, the creation of peers.

3. The things created; the universe.
As subjects then, the whole creation came;
And from their natures Adam them did name.

Denham.
Such was the faint, who shone with ev'ry grace,
Reflecting, Moses-like, his master's face:
God saw his image lively was express'd,
And his own work as his creation blest'd.

Dryden's Fables.
Nor could the tender new creation bear
Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year.

Dryden's Virgil.
In days of yore, no matter where or when,
Before the low creation swarm'd with men.

Parnet.
4. Any thing produced, or caused.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
CREA'TIVE. adj. [from create.]

1. Having the power to create.
But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative beauty burns
With warmest beam. Thomson's Spring.

2. Exerting the act of creation.
To trace the outgoings of the ancient of days in the first instance, and of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry. South.

CREA'TOR. n. f. [creator, Lat.] The being that bestows existence.

Open,

CRE

Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in
The great creatur, from his work return'd Magnificent; his six days work, a world. Milton.
When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

CRE'ATURE. n. f. [creatura, low Latin.]

1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the Creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures. Stillington.

2. Any thing created.

God's first creature was light.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be.

Tillotson.

3. An animal, not human.

The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only

In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

4. A general term for man.

Yet crime in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own self sake,
She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Spenser

Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
Lo, Tantalus, I here tormented lye, Spenser.

Though he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him. Roscommon.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;
Is this a holiday? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

He would into the stew,
And from the common creatures pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Nor think to-night of thy ill nature,
But of thy follies, idle creature. Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.

And then, Sir, would he gripe and wring my hand;
Cry, Oh sweet creature, and then kifs me hard.

Shakespeare.

Ah, cruel creature, whom dost thou despise?

Dict.

CRE'DENCE. n. f. [from credo, Latin; credence, Norman, Fr.]

1. Belief; credit.

CRE

Ne let it seem, that credence this exceeds;
For he that made the same was known right well.
To have done much more admirable deeds;
It Merlin was. Spenser.

Love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ample credence. Shakespeare.

They did not only underhand give out that this was the true earl; but the friar, finding some credence in the people, took boldness in the pulpit to declare as much. Bacon.

2. That which gives a claim to credit or belief.

After they had delivered to the king their letters of credence, they were led to a chamber richly furnished. Hayward.

CREDE'ND.A. n. f. [Latin.] Things to be believed; articles of faith; distinguished in theology

That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

CRE'DENTIAL. n. f. [from credens, Latin.] That which gives a title to credit; the warrant upon which belief or authority is claimed.

A few persons of an odious and despised country could not have filled the world with believers, had they not shown undoubted credentials from the Divine Person who sent them on such a message.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

CRE'DIBILITY. n. f. [from credibile.] Claim to credit; possibility of obtaining belief; probability.

The first of those opinions I shall shew to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of that nature is capable. Tillotson.

Calculate the several degrees of credibility and conviction, by which the one evidence surpasseth
the other. Alterbury.

CRE'DIBLE. adj. [credibilis, Latin.] Worthy of credit; deserving of belief; having a just claim to belief.

The ground of credit is the credibility of things credited; and things are made credible, either by the known condition and quality of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth in themselves. Hooker.

None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon the testimony of credible persons, I am free from doubt. Tillotson.

CRE'DIBLENESS. n. f. [from credibile.] Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to belief.

The credibility of a good part of these narratives has been confirmed to me by a practitioner of physick. Boyle.

CRE'DIBLY. adv. [from credibile.] In a manner that claims belief.

This, with the loss of so few of the English as

1. Belief of; faith yielded to another.

When the people heard these words, they gave no credit unto them, nor received them.

1 Mac. x. 46.

I may give credit to reports. Addison's Spectator.

Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
To maids alone and children are reveal'd:

What though no credit doubting wits may give,
The fair and innocent shall still believe. Pope.

2. Honour; reputation.

I published, because I was told I might please such a it was a credit to please. Pope.

3. Esteem; good opinion.

There is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Bacon.

CRE

His learning, though a poet said it,
Before a play, would lose no credit. Swift.

Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave,
Shall walk the world in credit to his grave.

Pope's Horace.

4. Faith; testimony; that which procures belief.

We are contented to take this upon your credit, and to think it may be. Hooker.

The things which we properly believe, be only such as are received upon the credit of divine testimony. Hooker.

The author would have done well to have left so great a paradox only to the credit of a single assertion. Locke.

5. Trust reposed; with regard to property;
correlative to debt.

Credit is nothing but the expectation money,
within some limited time. Locke.

6. Promise given.

They have never thought of violating the publick credit, or of alienating the revenues to other uses than to what they have been thus assigned.

Addison.

7. Influence; power not compulsive; interest.

She employed his uttermost credit to relieve us, which was as great as a beloved son with a mother.

Sidney.

ing, having procured him by his interest one of the best places of the country.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

2. Honourable; estimable.

The contemplation of things, that do not serve to promote our happiness, is but a more specious sort of idleness, a more pardonable and creditable kind of ignorance. Tillotson.

CRE'DITABLENESS. n. f. [from creditable.] Reputation; estimation.

Among all these snares, there is none more entangling than the creditable and repute of customary vices. Decay of Piety.

CRE'DITABLY. adv. [from creditable.] Reputa-bly; without disgrace.

Many will chuse rather to neglect their duty safely and creditable, than to get a broken pate in the church's service, only to be rewarded with that which will break their hearts too. South.

CRE'DITOR. n. f. [creditor, Latin.]

1. He to whom a debt is owed; he that gives credit; correlative to debtor.

There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot chuse but break. Shakespeare.

I am so used to consider myself as creditor and debtor,

debtor, that I often state my accounts after the same manner, with regard to heaven and my own soul.

No man of honour, as that word is usually understood, did ever pretend that his honour obliged him to be chaste or temperate, to pay his creditors, to be useful to his country, to do good to mankind, to endeavour to be wife or learned, to regard his word, his promise, or his oath.

2. One who credits, one who believes. Not used.

Many fought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive.

Shakespeare.

CRYPTICAL. } adj. [κρυπτός] Hidden; secret;

CRYPTICK. } occult; private; unknown; not divulged.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficiency of second causes.

Glanville's Apology.

Speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends. Watts.

CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.] Occultly; secretly: perhaps in the following example, the author might have written cryptically.

CRY

We take the word acid in a familiar sense, without cryptically distinguishing it from those factors that are akin to it. Boyle.

CRYPTOGRAPHY. n. f. [κρυπτός and γραφία.]

1. The art of writing secret characters.

2. Secret characters; cyphers.

CRYPTOLOGY. n. f. [κρυπτός and λόγος.] Ænigmatical language.

CRYSTAL. n. f. [κρυστάλλος.]

1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, not flexible or elastick, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstrua, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Fossils.

Island crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either bleached with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on optics, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill.

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as is seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in filicidia. Bacon.

If crystal be a stone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit. Brown.

Crystal is certainly known, and distinguished by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same. Woodward.

2. Crystal is also used for a factitious body cast in the glass-houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass; thou it comes far short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal. Chambers.

3. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters shot or congealed in manner of crystal. Chambers.

If the menstruum be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals. Bacon.

CRYSTAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of Gods, Thy crystal window ope, look out. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds By crystal streams, that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystalline glass. Boyle.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them. Bacon's Natural History.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime On the crystalline sky, in saphir throne'd Illustrious far and wide. Milton.

CRYSTALLINE Humour. n. f. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the forepart than the backpart of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray on the Creation.

CRY.

CRYSTALLIZATION. n. f. [from crystallize.]
1. Congellation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified, according to the nature and texture of the salts. The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, 'till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its solidity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is fated enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into crystals, they each of them resume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily divest them of their saltiness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concrection.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata.

Woodward's Natural History.

TO CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.] To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

TO CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate; congeal; concrete; or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

CUB. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear.

Shakespeare.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,

The lion, and the belly pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cubs, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tost,

One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame.

Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath fow'd a grizzle on thy case?

Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?

Shakespeare.

O most comical fight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwell's shop last night; but, such two unlick'd cubs!

Congreve.

TO CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cub'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown george with lowly fwabbers fed;

Dead wine, that stinks of the Borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup.

Dryden's Pers.

Harris.

CUBE. n. f. [from κύβηξ a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal.

Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew's Cosmol.

CUBE Root. n. f. The origin of a cubick CUBICK Root. n. f. number; or a number by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CUBEB. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish-brown colour on the surface. It has an aromack smell, and is acrid to the taste. Cubeb are brought from Java. Hill.

Aromaticks, as cubeb, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits. Floyer on the Humours.

CUBICAL. adj. [from cube.]

CUBICK. adj. [from cube.]

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel, containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated.

Wilkins's Math. Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubick numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrated and cubical numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUBICALNESS. n. f. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed their cubicular beds into discubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Calmet.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard and a quarter of the stature, and makes a cubit; the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Holder on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Milton.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight,
Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit height.

Arbutnot on Measures.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that unto men below, they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Pope.

CUBITATE. n. f. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowell.

These mounted on a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,

March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras.

CUCKOLD. n. f. [cocu, Fr. from cuckoo.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't.

Shakespeare's Othello.

There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;

And many a man there is, ev'n at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in's absence.

Shakespeare.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed

Of lands, to her the cuckold may succeed.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Ever since the reign of king Charles II. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift.

TO CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,
Nor strut in streets with amazonian pace;
For that's to cuckold thee before thy face.

Dryden's Juvenal.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. f. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

CUCKOLDOM. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldom against me.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

CUCKOO. n. f. [cuculus, Lat. cucucu, Welsh; cocu, Fr. cockcock, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the Spring; and is said to fuck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place; from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband at the approach of an adulterer by calling cuckoo, which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. The bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

Finding Mopsa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidey.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of Spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded.

Spenser.

The plainfong cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, nay.

Shakespeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:

Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright.

Shakespeare.

2. It is a name of contempt.
Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running?—

—A horseback, ye cuckoo;—but a-foot, he will not budge a foot.

CUCKOO-BUD. } n. f. [cardaminus, Latin.]
CUCKOO-FLOWER. } The name of a flower.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight.

Nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds.

CUCKOO-SPITTLE. n. f. [cuckoo and spittle.]
Cuckoo-spittle, or woodfare, is that spumous dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary;
observable with us about the latter end of May.

CUCCULATED. } adj. [cucculatus, hooded, Lat.]
1. Hooded; covered as with a hood or cowl.
2. Having the resemblance or shape of a hood.
They are differently cucculated, and capuched upon the head and back.

CU'UMBER. n. f. [cucumis, Latin.] The name of a plant, and also of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one single leaf, bell shaped, and expanded towards the top, and cut into many segments; of which some are male, or bar-ren, having no embryo, but only a large style in the middle, charged with the farina: others are female, or fruitful, being fastened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleshy fruit, for the most part oblong and turbinate, which is divided into three or four cells, inclosing many oblong seeds. The species are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turky cucumber.

How cucumbers along the surface creep,
With crooked bodies and with bellies deep.

CUCURBITACEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita,
Latin, a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceous plants are those which resemble a gourd; such as the pumpkin and melon.

CU'CURBITE. n. f. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical vessel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glass, in the shape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbita.

I have, for curiosity's sake, distilled quicksilver in a cucurbita, fitted with a capacious glass-head.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cucurbita glass, upon which pour the strongest aqua fortis.

CUD. n. f. [cu'd, Saxon.] That food which is reposit in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle came lither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love.

You range the pathless wood,
While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud.

CU'DEN. } n. f. [without etymology.] A clown; CU'DDY. } a stupid rustic; a low dolt; a low bad word.

The flustering cud-den, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh.

To CU'DDLE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lie close; to squat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?

She cuddles low behind the brake;
Nor would she stay, nor dares she fly.

CU'DGEL. n. f. [kudj, Dutch.]
1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs while they are green, are brittle;
yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels.

CUE

Do not provoke the rage of stones
And cudgels to thy hide and bones.

Tremble and vanish.

The ass was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one play-fellow and the other.

His furly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cudgel.

The wife Cornelius was convinced, that these, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-playing.

2. To cross the CU'DGELS, is to forbear the contest, from the practice of cudgel-players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cross the cudgel, or to be baffled in the conclusion.

To CU'DGEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouth'd man as he is; and said he would cudgel you.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating.

A good woman happened to pass by as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for.

CU'DGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword, yet cudgel-proof.

CU'DLE. n. f. A small sea-fish.

Of round fish there are britt, sprat, caddles, eels.

CU'DWEED. n. f. [from cud and weed.] A plant.

CUE. n. f. [quæ, a tail, French.]
1. The tail or end of any thing; as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last words of a speech which the player who is to answer catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue.

3. An hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion That I have? He would drown the stage with tears.

Let him know how many servants there are, of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party.

5. Humour; temper of mind; a low word.

CU'ERPO. n. f. [Spanish.] To be in cu'erro, is to be without the upper coat or cloak, so as to discover the true shape of the cu'erro or body.

Expos'd in cu'erro to their rage,
Without my arms and equipage.

CUI

CUFF. n. f. [cuffia, a battle; cuffare, to fight,
Italian.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest set fall the book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest.

There was no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court,
While the peers cuff, to make the rabble sport.

To CUFF. v. a.
1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him.—
—Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword.

Were not you, my friend, abused and cuff'd,
and kicked?

2. To strike with talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,
Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues that would rise
To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird.

They with their quills did all the hurt they could,
And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food.

3. To strike with wings. This seems improper.

How'ring about the coasts, they make their moan,
And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own.

CUFF. n. f. [cuffe, French.] Part of the sleeve.

He railed at tops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning gown, band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard.

CU'INAGE. n. f. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into, for carriage to other places.

CU'IRASS. n. f. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccia, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pursu'd the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,
And sign'd his bosom with a purple dint.

CU'IRASSIER. n. f. [from cuirass.] A man of arms; a soldier in armour.

The field all iron, cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight.

The picture of St. George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure.

CU'ISH. n. f. [cuiffe, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His cuishes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury.

The crocket some, and some the cuishes mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold.

But what had our author to wound Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuishes to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour? Dryden.

CULDEES. n. f. [colidei, Latin.] Monks in Scotland.

CULERAGE. n. f. The same plant with ARSE. SMART.

CULINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of the culinary fire. Newton.

To those, who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture. Arbutnot.

TO CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others: to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had, being cull'd out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Our engines shall be bent

Against the brows of this resisting town:

Call for our chiefest men of discipline,

To cull the plots of best advantage.

Shakespeare's King John.

Like the bee, culling from ev'ry flow'r,

Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey. Shakespeare.

I do remember an apothecary

In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Then in a moment fortune shall call forth,

Out of one side her happy minion.

Shakespeare's King John.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being cull'd, as it were, this grand charter was extracted.

Howell's Parley of Beasts.

When false flow'rs of rhetoric thou would'st call,

Trust natures do not labour to be dull. Dryden.

From his herd he culls,

For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls.

Dryden's Virgil.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the traders in money call out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Locke.

With humble duty and officious haste,

I'll call the farthest mead for thy repast. Prior.

The various off'rings of the world appear:

From each she nicely culls with curious toil,

And decks the goddess with the glitt'ring spoil. Pope.

CULLER. n. f. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CULLION. n. f. [Proglione, a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion.] It seems to import meanness rather than folly. A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,

And makes a god of such a cullion.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Up to the breach, you dogs; avaunt, you cullions. Shakespeare.

CULLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you: you whorson, cullionly, barber-monger, draw.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

CULLUMINE. n. f. [more properly spelt Colymbine.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Miller.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry-bed;

Her neck like to a bunch of cullumines.

Spenser.

CULLY. n. f. [collion, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpers or a strumpet.

Why should you, whose mother-wits

Are furnish'd with all perquisites,

B'allow'd to put all tricks upon

Our cully sex, and we use none? Hudibras.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare:

They purchase but sophisticated ware. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cully. Arbutnot.

TO CULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To be fool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMIFEROUS. adj. [culmus and fero, Latin.] Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with fingle, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks. Quincy.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprius and culmiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves. Woodward on Fossils.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet. Arbutnot.

TO CULMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Latin.] To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands;

For fight no obstacle found here, or shade,

But all sun-shine; as when his beams at noon

Culminate from th' equator. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CULMINATION. n. f. [from culminate.] The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CULPABILITY. n. f. [from culpable.] Blameableness.

CULPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Lat.]

1. Criminal.

Proceed no farther 'gainst our uncle Gloucester,

Than from true evidence of good esteem,

He be approv'd in practice culpable. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. Guilty: with of.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Ireland.

3. Blameable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable, to the end that to him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just. Hooker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; for as much as it was in every man's power to have prevented it. South.

CULPABLENESS. n. f. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

CULPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blameably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily. Taylor.

CULPRIT. n. f. [About this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judges at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers; Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il paroit, May it so appear, the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim;

Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;

And, after forms of law, was last requir'd

To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dryden.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the publick are his judges: by allowing too much, and condescending too far, he may injure his own cause; and by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior's Preface to Solomon.

CULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plow perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coulter.

Her fallow leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

TO CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, French.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth by manual industry.

Those excellent feeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton on the Classics.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our faults,

And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,

Our muse would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,

To cultivate the wild licentious savage

With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,

Th' embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVATION. n. f. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVATOR. n. f. [from cultivate.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover-grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up. Boyle.

CULTURE. n. f. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us seed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of it. 2 Esd. viii. 6.

These three last were slower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented 'till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? if vain our toil,

We ought to blame the culture, not the soil.

Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere. Pope.

They rose as vigorous as the sun;

Then to the culture of the willing glebe. Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skilful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Tatler.

TO CULTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CULVER. n. f. [columba, culpe, Sax.] A pigeon. An old word.

Had he so done, he had him snatch'd away,

More light than culver in the falcon's fist. Spenser.

Whence borne on liquid wing,

The founding culver shoots. Thomson's Spring.

CULVERIN. n. f. [colouvrine, French.] A species of ordnance; originally an hawk.

A whole cannon requires, for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of sixty-four pounds; a culverin, sixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

Here a well polish'd mall gives us the joy

To see our prince his matchless force employ:

No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball,

But 'tis already more than half the mall;

And such a fury from his arm't has got,

As from a smoking culverin 'twere shot. Waller.

CUM

CUM'LYERKEY. n. f. A flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping cum'lyerkeys and cowslips, to make gar-lands. Walton's Angler.

To CUMBER. v. a. [kommeren, komberen, to disturb, Dutch.]

1. To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.

Why asks he what avails him not in fight,
And would but cumber and retard his flight,
In which his only excellence is plac'd!
You give him death, that intercept his haste.

Dryden's Fables.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears,

Clog'd with his cloaths, and cumber'd with his years. Dryden.

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and unpleasant enough in itself, should not be cumber'd with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Locke.

2. To crowd or load with something useless.

CUMBRANCE. n. f. [from cumber.] Burthen;
hindrance; impediment.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wife man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.

Milton.

CUMEROUS. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious; disturbing.

A cloud of cumeroous gnats do him molest;
All striving to infix their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can rest.

Spenser.

2. Oppressive; burthenfome.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much! Bent rather, how I may be quit, Fairest and easiest, of this cumeroous charge. Milton.

They rear'd him from the ground,
And from his cumeroous arms his limbs unbound;
Then lanc'd a vein. Dryden.

A man that beholds the mighty shoals of shells, bedded and cumulated heap upon heap, amongst earth, will scarcely conceive which way these could ever live. Woodward.

CUMULATION. n. f. The act of heaping together.

Dict.

CUNCTATION. n. f. [cunctatio, Lat.] Delay;
procrastination; dilatoriness.

It is most certain, that the English made not their best improvements of these fortunate events;
and that especially by two miserable errors, cuncta-tion in prosecuting, and haste in departure.

Hayward.

The swiftest animal, conjoined with a heavy body, implies that common moral, festina lente;
and that celerity should always be tempered with cunctation.

Brown.

CUNCTATOR. n. f. [Latin.] One given to delay; a lingerer; an idler; a sluggard. Not in use.

Others being unwilling to discourage such cunctators, always keep them in good hope, that, if they are not yet called, they may yet, with the thief, be brought in at the last hour.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

To CUND. v. n. [from connen, to know, Dutch.]

Fit to instruct her youth.—To cunning men
I will be very kind; and liberal
To mine own children in good bringing up.

Shakespeare.

I do present you with a man of mine,
Cunning in musick and the mathematicks,
To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shaksfp.
Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? Wherein cunning, but in craft? Wherein craft-ty, but in villainy? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and that can skill to cut and to grave. 2 Chron.

When Pedro does the lute command,
She guides the cunning artist's hand. Prior.

2. Performed with skill; artful.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtle net, Enwrapped in foul smother, and clouds more black than jet. Spenser.

And there beside of marble stone was built,
An altar carv'd with cunning imagery;

On which true Christians blood was often spilt,
And holy martyrs often done to die. Spenser.

CUP

Once put out thy light,

Thou cunning'st pattern of excellent nature;
I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relumine. Shaksfp. Othello.

3. Artfully deceitful; fly; designing; trickish; full of fetches and stratagems; subtle; crafty;
subdulous.

These small wares and petty points of cunning are infinite, and it were a good deed to make a list of them; for nothing doth more hurt than that cunning men pass for wife. Bacon.

Men will leave truth and misery to such as love it; they are resolved to be cunning: let others run the hazard of being sincere. South.

4. Acted with subtilty.

The more he protested, the more his father thought he dissembled, accounting his integrity to be but a cunning face of falsehood. Sidney.

CUNNING. n. f. [cunninge, Saxon.]

1. Artifice; deceit; slyness; slight; craft;
subtily; dissimulation; fraudulent dexterity.

What if I be not so much the poet, as even that miserable subject of his cunning, whereof you speak.

Sidney.

We take cunning for a sinister or crooked wif-dom; and certainly there is great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability. Bacon.

Discourage cunning in a child; cunning is the ape of wisdom. Locke.

2. Art; skill; knowledge.

CUNNINGLY. adv. [from cunning.] Artfully; slyly; subtly; by fraudulent contrivance; crafttily.

Amongst other crimes of this nature, there was diligent enquiry made of such as had raised and dispersed a bruit or rumour, a little before the field fought, that the rebels had the day, and that the king's army was overthrown, and the king fled; whereby it was supposed that many succours were cunningly put off and kept back.

Bacon's Henry VII.

I must meet my danger, and destroy him first;
But cunningly and closely. Denham's Sophy.

When stock is high, they come between,
Making by second hand their offers;

Then cunningly retire unseen,
With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

CUNNINGMAN. n. f. [cunning and man.] A man who pretends to tell fortunes, or teach how to recover stolen goods.

He sent him for a strong detachment
Of beadle, constable, and watchmen,
T' attack the cunningman for plunder
Committed fully on his lumber. Hudibras.

1. A small vessel to drink in.

Thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler. Genesis.

Ye heav'nly pow'rs that guard
The British isles, such dire events remove Far from fair Albion: nor let civil broils Ferment from social cups. Philips.

2. The liquor contained in the cup; the draught.

Which when the vile enchantress perceiv'd,
With cup thus charm'd, imparting she deceiv'd.

Spenser.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cups of their deservings.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Will't please your lordship, drink a cup of sack?

Shakespeare.

They that never had the use
Of the grape's surprising juice,
To the first delicious cup

All their reason render up. Waller.

The best, the dearest favourite of the sky,
Must taste that cup; for man is born to die.

Pope's Odysey.

3. Social entertainment; merry bout, [in the plural.]

Then

CUP

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.

Shaksp. Henry V.

Let us suppose that I were reasoning, as one friend with another by the fireside, or in our cups, without care, without any great affection to either party.

Knolles,

It was near a miracle to see an old man silent, since talking is the disease of age; but amongst cups, makes fully a wonder.

Ben Jonson's Discov.

Thence from cups, to civil broils!
Amidst his cups with fainting shiv'ring seiz'd,
His limbs disjointed, and all o'er diseas'd,
His hand refuses to sustain the bowl.

Dryden's Perseus.

4. Any thing hollow like a cup; as, the husk of an acorn, the bell of a flower.

A pyrites of the same colour and shape, placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherick figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup.

Woodward on Fossils.

5. CUP and can. Familiar companions. The can is the large vessel, out of which the cup is filled, and to which it is a constant associate.

You boasting tell us where you din'd,
And how his lordship was so kind;
Swear he's a most facetious man;
That you and he are cup and can:
You travel with a heavy load,
And quite mistake preferment's road.

Swift.

6. [Couper, French, to scarify.] A glass to draw the blood in scarification.

Hippocrates tells you, that in applying of cups, the scarification ought to be made with crooked instruments.

Arbutnot

To CUP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with cups. This sense is obsolete.

Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd:
With the grapes our hairs be crown'd:
Cup us, 'till the world go round.

Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

2. [Couper, to cut, Fr.] To fix a glass bell or cucurbit upon the skin, to draw the blood in scarification.

The clotted blood lies heavy on his heart,
Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art:
Nor breathing veins, nor cupping will prevail;
All outward remedies and inward fail.

Dryden's Fables.

You have quartered all the foul language upon me, that could be raked out of the air of Billingsgate, without knowing who I am; or whether I deserve to be cupped and scarified at this rate.

Spektor.

Blistering, cupping, and bleeding are seldom of use but to the idle and intemperate.

Addison's Spectator.

Him the damn'd doctors and his friends immur'd;

They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd: in short they cur'd.

Pope.

CUPBEARER. n. f.

1. An officer of the king's household. There is conveyed to Mr. Villiers an intimation of the king's pleasure to wait and to be sworn his servant, and shortly after his cupbearer at large; and the summer following he was admitted in ordinary.

CURB. n. f. [couber, to bend, French.]

1. A curb is an iron chain, made fast to the upper part of the branches of the bridle, in a hole called the eye, and running over the beard of the horse.

Farrier's Dict.

The ox hath his bow, the horse his curb, and the falcon his bells; so man hath his desire.

Shakspere's As you like it.

So four fierce couriers, starting to the race,
Scow'r through the plain, and lengthen ev'ry pace;
Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threatening cries they fear.

Dryden.

2. Restraint; inhibition; opposition; hindrance.

The Roman state, whose course will on
The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong links afunder, than can ever
Appear in your impediment.

Shakspere's Coriolanus.

We remain

In strict bondage, though thus far remov'd,
Under th' inevitable curb reserv'd
His captive multitude.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

By these men, religion, that should
The curb, is made the spur to tyranny.

Denham's Sophy.

Even they who think us under no other tie to the true interest of our country, will allow this to be an effectual curb upon us.

Atterbury.

3. A curb is a hard and callous tumour, which runs along the inside of a horse's hoof: that is, on that part of the hoof that is opposite to the leg of the lame side.

Farrier's Dict.

force into concretions.

His changed powers at first themselves not felt,
Till curdled cold his courage 'gan t' assail. Spens.
Mixed with the sixth part of a spoonful of milk, it burnt to the space of one hundred pulses, and the milk was curdled.

My soul is all the same,
Unmov'd with fear, and mov'd with martial fame;
But my chill blood is curdled in my veins,
And scarce the shadow of a man remains.

Ev'n now a fatal draught works out my soul;
Ev'n now it curdles in my shrinking veins
The lazy blood, and freezes at my heart. Smith.

There is in the spirit of wine some acidity, by which brandy curdles milk.

CURDY. adj. [from curd.] Coagulated; concreted; full of curds; curdled.

lating into a curdy mass with acids.

CURE. n. f. [cura, Latin]

1. Remedy; restorative.

This league that we have made,
Will give her sadness very little cure,
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow lady?
Cold, hunger, prisons, ills without a cure,
All these he must, and guiltless oft, endure.

Now we're ador'd, and the next hour displease;
At first your cure, and after your disease. Granv.
Horace advises the Romans to seek a seat in some remote part, by way of a cure for the corruption of manners.

2. Act of healing.

I do cures to-day, and to-morrow. Luk. xii. 32.

3. The benefice or employment of a curate or clergyman.

If his curies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against entangling property, spinning out causes, squeezing clients, and making the laws a greater grievance than those who break them.

To CURE. v. a. [cura, Latin.]

2. To heal; to restore to health; to remedy; to recover: with of before the disease. Used of patients or diseased.

The bones, in sharp colds, wax brittle; and therefore all contusions of bones, in hard weather, are more difficult to cure. Bacon's Natural History.

Here the poor lover, that has long endur'd
Some proud nymph's scorn, of his fond passion's cur'd.

I never knew any man cur'd of inattention.

Hear what from love unpractis'd hearts endure
From love, the sole disease thou canst not cure. Pope.

2. To prepare in any manner, so as to be preserved from corruption.

The beef would be so ill chosen, or so ill cur'd, asto stink many times before it came so far as Holland.

CURLESS. adj. [cure and less.] Without cure;
without remedy.

Booteless are plaints, and curlefs are my wounds;
No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight.

Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To curlefs ruin.

Your grief alone is hard captivity,
For love of heav'n, with patience undergo
A curlefs ill, since fate will have it so.

CURER, n. f. [from cure.] A healer; a physician.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies:
if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions.

The indexterity and worse success of the most famous of our consumption curers, do evidently demonstrate their dimness in beholding its causes.

CURFEW. n. f. [couvre feu, French.] An evening-peal, by which the conqueror willed, that every man should rake up his fire, and put out his light; so that in many places at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bed time, it is said to ring curfew.

You whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew.

Oft on a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd shoar,
Swinging slow with fullen roar.

2. A cover for a fire: a fireplate.
But now for pans, pots, curfews, counters, and the like, the beauty will not be so much respected, so as the compound stuff is like to pass.

privileges, prerogatives, or perhaps retinue of a court.

The court and curiality.

CURIOSITY. n. f. [from curious.]

1. Inquisitiveness; inclination to enquiry.

2. Nicety; delicacy.

When thou wast in thy guilt, and thy perfume, they mock thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary.

3. Accuracy; exactness.

Qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Our senses, however armed or assisted, are too gross to discern the curiosity of the workmanship of nature.

4. An act of curiosity; nice experiment.

There hath been practis'd also a curiosity, to set a tree upon the north side of a wall, and, at a little height, to draw it through the wall, and spread it upon the south-side; conceiving that the root and lower part of the stock should enjoy the freshness of the shade, and the upper boughs and fruit, the comfort of the sun; but it sort'd not.

5. An object of curiosity; rarity.

We took a ramble together to see the curiosities of this great town.

CURIUS. adj. [curiosus, Lat.]

1. Inquisitive; desirous of information; addied to enquiry.

Be not curious in unnecessary matters; for more things are shewn unto thee than men understand.

Even then to them the spirit of lies suggests,
That they were blind, because they saw not ill;
And breath'd into their uncorrupted breasts
A curious wish, which did corrupt their will.

If any one too curious should enquire
After a victory which we disdain,
Then let him know the Belgians did retire
Before the patron saint of injur'd Spain.

Reader, if any curious stay
To ask my hated name,
Tell them, the grave that hides my clay
Conceals me from my shame.

2. Attentive to; diligent about: sometimes with after.

It is pity a gentleman so very curious after things that were elegant and beautiful, should not have been as curious as to their origin, their uses, and their natural history.

3. Sometimes with of.

Then thus a senior of the place replies,
Well read, and curious of antiquities.

4. Accurate; careful not to mistake.

'Till Arianism had made it a matter of great sharpness and subtlety of wit to be a found believing Christian, men were not curious what syllables or particles of speech they used.

5. Difficult to please; solicitous of perfection;
not negligent; full of care.

A temperate person is not curious of fancies and deliciousness; he thinks not much, and speaks not often of meat and drink.

6. Exact; nice; subtle.

Both these senses embrace their objects at greater distance, with more variety, and with a more curious discrimination than the other sense.

7. Artful; not neglectful; not fortuitous.

A vaile obscur'd the sunshine of her eyes,
The rose within herself her sweetness clost;
Each ornament about her feemly lies,
By curious chance, or careless art, compos'd.

8. Elegant; neat; laboured; finished.

Understanding to devise curious works, to work in gold.

9. Rigid; severe; rigorous.

For curious I cannot be with you,
Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.

CURIOSLY. adv. [from curious.]

1. Inquisitively; attentively; studiously.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he said his strength had not yet forsaken him.

At first I thought there had been no light reflected from the water in that place; but observing it more curiously, I saw within it several smaller round spots, which appeared much blacker and darker than the rest.

2. Elegantly; neatly.

Nor is it the having of wheels and springs, though never so curiously wrought and artificially set, but the winding of them up, that must give motion to the watch.

3. Artfully; exactly.

4. Captiously.

CURL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A ringlet of hair.

She apparelled herself like a page, cutting off her hair, leaving nothing but the short curls to cover that noble head.

Just as in act he stood, in clouds enshrin'd,
Her had she fasten'd on his hair behind;
Then backward by his yellow curls he drew
To him, and him alone confess'd in view.

2. Undulation; wave; sinuosity; flexure.

Thus it happens, if the glass of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plain and well polished, without those numberless

waves

And when he has it in his claws,

He'll not be hide-bound to the cause;

Nor shalt thou find him a curmudgeon;

If thou dispatch it without grudging. Hudibras.

A man's way of living is commended, because he will give any rate for it, and a man will give any rate rather than pass for a poor wretch, or a penurious curmudgeon. Locke.

CURMU'DGEONLY. adj. [from curmudgeon.] Avaritious; covetous; churlish; niggardly.

In a country where he that killed a hog invited the neighbourhood, a curmudgeonly fellow advised with his companions how he might save the charge. L'Estrange.

CURRANT. n. f. [vibes, Latin.]

1. The tree hath no prickles; the leaves are larger: the flower consists of five leaves, placed in form of a rose: the ovary, which arises from the centre of the flower-cup, becomes a globular fruit, produced in bunches.

2. A small dried grape; properly written currant.

They butter'd currants on fat veal bestow'd,

And rumps of beef with virgin honey stew'd

Inspid taste, old friend, to them who Paris know,

Where recombole, shallot, and the rank garlic grow. King.

CURRENT. n. f. [from current.]

About three months ago we had a current report of the king of France's death. Addison.

4. Popular; such as is established by vulgar estimation.

We are also to consider the difference between worth and merit, strictly taken: that is, a man's intrinsic; this, his current value; which is less or more, as men have occasion for him. Grew.

5. Fashionable; popular.

Of leaving what is natural and fit,

The current folly proves our ready wit;

And authors think their reputation safe,

Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh. Pope.

6. Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.

Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make

No excuse current, but to hang thyself. Shakespeare's Richard III.

7. What is now passing; what is at present in its course: as, the current year.

CURRENT. n. f.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,

Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;

But his fair course is not hindered;

He makes sweet musick with the enamel'd stones. Shakespeare.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quickest, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,

Whose fame in thine, like lesser currents lost;

Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,

To shine among the stars and bathe the gods. Den.

No fabled Po more swells the poet's lays,

While through the sky his shining current strays. Pope.

CUR

2. [In navigation.] Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determined depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current, with or against the way of the ship. Harris.

3. Course; progression.

The Castle of Cadmus was taken, and Thebes invested by Pheidias the Lacedemonian infidiously, which drew on a re-surprize of the castle, a recovery of the town, and a current of the war even into the walls of Sparta. Bacon.

CURRENTLY. adj. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.

2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh 'the simple and ignorant to think they even saw how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are forestalled, and their conceits perverted beforehand. Hooker's Preface.

3. Popularity; fashionably; generally.

4. Without ceasing.

CURRENTNESS. n. f. [from current.]

1. Circulation.

2. General reception.

CURRIER. n. f. [curarius, Latin.] One who dresses and pares leather for those who make shoes, or other things.

A currier bought a bearskin of a huntsman, and laid him down ready money for it. L'Estrange.

Warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found

To lodge their loathsome carrion under ground;

For useless to the currier were their hides,

Nor could their tainted flesh with ocean tides

Be freed from filth. Dryden's Virgil.

CURRISH. adj. [from cur.] Having the qualities of a degenerate dog; brutal; four; quarrelsome; malignant; churlish; uncivil; untractable; impracticable.

Sweet speaking oft a currish heart reclaims. Sidney.

No care of justice, nor no rule of reason,

Did thenceforth enter in his mind,

But cruelty, the sign of currish kind. Hubbard's Tale.

In fashions wayward, and in love unkind;

For Cupid deigns not wound a currish mind. Fairfax.

I would she were in heaven, so she could

Entreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew. Shakespeare.

She says your dog was a cur; and tells you,

currish thanks is good enough for such a present. Shakespeare.

To CURRY. v. a. [curium, leather, Latin.]

1. To dress leather, by beating and rubbing it.

2. To beat; to drub; to thresh; to chastise.

A deep design in't to divide

The well-affected that confide;

By setting brother against brother,

To claw and curry one another. Hudibras.

I may expect her to take care of her family, and curry her hide in case of refusal. Addison's Spectator.

3. To rub a horse with a scratching instrument, so as to smooth his coat, and promote his flesh.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full;

as we see both in men, and in the currying of horses:

the cause is, for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits and blood to the parts. Bacon.

4. To scratch in kindness; to rub down with flattery; to tickle.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakespeare.

To CURRY FAVOUR. To become a favourite by petty officiousness, slight kindnesses, or flattery.

He judg'd them still over-abstractly to fawn upon the heathens, and to curry favour with infidels. Hooker.

This

This humour succeeded so with the puppy, that an ass would go the same way to work to curry for himself. L'Estrange.

CURRYCOMB. n. f. [from curry and comb.] An iron instrument used for currying or cleaning horses.

He has a clearer idea from a little print than from a long definition; and so he would have of figural and figural, if, instead of a currycomb and cymbal, he could see stamped in the margin small pictures of these instruments. Locke.

TO CURSE. v. a. [cuprian, Saxon.]

1. To wish evil to; execrate; to devote.

Curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me. Numbers.

After Solyman had looked upon the dead body, and bitterly curst the fame, he caused a great weight to be tied unto it, and so cast unto the sea. Knolles.

What, yet again! the third time hast thou curst me:

This imprecation was for Laius' death, And thou hast wished me like him. Dryd. and Lee.

2. To mischief; to afflict; to torment.

On impious realms and barbarous kings impose Thy plagues, and curse 'em with such fons as those Pope.

TO CURSE. v. n. To imprecate: to deny or affirm with imprecation of divine vengeance.

The silver about which thou *curst*est, and speakest of also in my ears, behold the silver is with me. Jud. xvi. 2.

CURSE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Malediction; wish of evil to another.

Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul. Job.

I never went from your lordship, but with a longing to return, or without a hearty curse to him who invented ceremonies, and put me on the necessity of withdrawing. Dryden.

2. Affliction; torment; vexation.

Curse on the stripling! how he apes his fire?

Ambitiously sententious! Addison's Cato.

CURSED. participle adj. [from curse.]

Merciful pow'rs!

Restrain in me the curst thoughts that nature Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Unholy; un sanctified; blasted by a curse.

Come lady, while heav'n lends us grace,

Let us fly this curst place,

Left the forcer us entice

With some other new device;

Not a waste or needles found,

'Till we come to holier ground. Milton.

2. Vexatious; troublesome.

This curst quarrel be no more renew'd; Be, as becomes a wife, obedient still: Though griev'd, yet subject to her husband's will. Dryden.

One day, I think, in paradise he liv'd; Defin'd the next his journey to pursue, Where wounding thorns and curst thistles grew. Prior.

CURSEDLY. adv. [from curst.] Miserably; shamefully; a low cant word.

Satisfaction and restitution lies so *curst*ly hard on the gizzards of our publicans. L'Estrange.

Sure this is a nation that is *curst*ly afraid of being over-run with too much politeness, and cannot regain one great genius but at the expence of another. Pope.

CURSEDNESS. n. f. [from curst.] The state of being under a curse.

CURSHIP. n. f. [from cur.] Dogship; meanings; scoundrelship.

How darst th', I say, oppose thy curship, 'Gainst arms, authority, and worship. Hudibras.

CURSTOR. n. f. [Latin.] An officer or clerk belonging to the Chancery, that makes out original writs. They are called clerks of course, in the oath of the clerks of Chancery. Of these there are twenty-four in number, which have certain shares allotted to each of them, into which they make out such original writs as are required; — they are a corporation among themselves. Cow I.

Then is the recognition and value, signed with the handwriting of that justice, carried by the *curst*or in Chancery for that shire where those lands do lie, and by him is a writ of covenant thereupon drawn, and ingrossed in parchment. Bacon.

CURSORARY. adj. [from cursor, Latin.] *Curst*or; hasty; careless. A word, I believe, only found in the following line.

I have but with a cursorary eye

O'erland'd the articles. Shakespeare's Henry V.

CURSORILY. adv. [from cursor.] Hastily; without care; without solicitous attention.

This power, and no other, Luther disowns, as any one that views the place but cursorily must needs see. Atterbury.

CURSORINESS. n. f. [from cursor.] Slight attention.

CURSORY. adj. [from cursorius, Latin.] Hasty; quick; inattentive; careless.

The first, upon a *curst*or and superficial view, appeared like the head of another man. Addison.

CURST. adj. Forward; peevish; malignant; mischievous; malicious; snarling.

Mr. Mafon, after his manner, was very merry with both parties, pleasantly playing both with the shrewd touches of many curst boys, and with the small discretion of many lewd schoolmasters. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Curst cows have short horns. Proverbs.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen, Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

I have no gift at all in shrewishness;

I am a right maid, for my cowardice;

Let her not strike me. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

I'll go and see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Her only fault, and that is fault enough, Is, that she is intolably curst,

And shrewd and forward, so beyond all measure,

That, were my state far worse than it is,

I would not wed her for a mine of gold. Shakef.

When I dissuaded him from his intent,

And found him pight to do it with curst speech,

I threaten'd to discover him. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

And though his mind

Be ne'er so curst, his tongue is kind. Crashaw.

CURSTNESS. n. f. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.

Then, noble partners,

Touch you the fow'rest points with sweetest terms,

Nor *curst*ness grow to the matter: Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Her mouth she writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;

Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,

And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the *curst*ness of a shrew. Dryden.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

TO CURTAIL. v. a. [curto, Latin.] It was anciently written cortal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut, being called cortal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.]

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,

Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time

Into this breathing world. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Then why should we ourselves abridge,

And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras.

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

This general employ, and expence of their time, would as assuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.

Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we must, has so miserably curtailed some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables. Addison's Spectator.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the court, that Fact his Antagonist had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Fact, but Faction. Addison.

CURTAL. n. f. A dog lamed, or mutilated, according to the forest laws, whose tail is cut off, and is therefore hindered in courting. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtal dog, and made me turn i' th' wheel. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

CURTAIN. n. f. [coquina, Latin.]

1. A cloth contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light; to conceal or discover any thing; to shade a bed; to darken a room.

Their curtains ought to be kept open, so as to renew the air. Arbutnot on Diet.

So through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray, And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

Thy hand, great dullness! let's the curtain fall,

And universal darkness buries all. Pope.

2. To draw the CURTAIN. To close it so as to shut out the light, or conceal the object.

I must draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in suspense. Burnet's Theory.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the last: the curtain will soon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wish you a long good night. Pope.

3. To open it so as to discern the object.

So soon as the all-cheering sun

Should in the farthest East begin to draw

The shady curtain from Aurora's bed. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,

'Till this stormy night be gone;

And th' eternal morrow dawn,

Then the curtain will be drawn. Crashaw.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two bastions. Military Dict.

The governour, not discouraged, suddenly of timber and boards raised up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his soldiers. Knolles.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. f. [from curtain and lecture.] A reproof given by a wife to her husband in bed.

What endless brawls by wives are bred!

The curtain lecture makes a mournful bed. Dryden's Juvenal.

She ought to exert the authority of the curtain lecture, and, if she finds him of a rebellious disposition, to tame him. Addison.

TO CURTAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose or accommodate with curtains.

Now o'er one half the world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain'd sleep. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The wand'ring prince and Dido,

When with a happy storm they were surpriz'd

And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave. Shakespeare.

But in her temple's last recess inclos'd,

On dulness' lap th' anointed head repos'd:

Him clofe the curtain'd round with vapours blew,

And soft besprinkled with cimmerian dew. Pope.

CURTATE. n. f. [In astronomy.] The distance of a planet's place from the sun, reduced to the ecliptick.

He cram'd them, 'till their guts did ache,
With cawdle, custard, and plumb cake.

Hudibras.

Now may'r and shrieves all hush'd and satiate lay;
Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day.

Pope.

CUSTODY, n. f. [custodia, Latin.]

1. Imprisonment; restraint of liberty.

The council remonstrated unto queen Elizabeth the conspiracies against her life, and therefore they advised her, that she should go less abroad weakly attended; but the queen answered, she had rather be dead than put in custody.

Bacon.

For us enslav'd, is custody severe,

And stripes, and arbitrary punishment

Inflicted?

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Care; guardianship; charge.

Under the custody and charge of the sons of Moriari, shall be the boards of the tabernacle.

Numb. iii. 36.

We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody?

Shakespeare.

An offence it were, rashly to depart out of the city committed to their custody.

Kneller.

There is generally but one coin stamp'd upon the occasion, which is made a present to the person who is celebrated on it; by this means the whole fame is in his own custody.

Addison.

Addison.

5. Application from buyers: as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.] A law or right, not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practised. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued to one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England; particular is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city or town. Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man; prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom.

Corvet.

7. Tribute; tax paid for goods imported, or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the escheats and forfeitures, the custom, butlerage, and imposts.

Bacon.

Those commodities may be dispersed, after having paid the customs in England.

Temple.

Customs to steal is such a trivial thing,

That 'tis their charter to defraud their king.

Dryden.

Strabo tells you, that Britain bore heavy taxes, especially the customs on the importation of the Gallick trade.

Arbuthnot.

CUSTOMHOUSE, n. f. The house where the taxes upon goods imported or exported are collected.

Some customhouse officers, birds of passage, and oppressive thrifty quires, are the only thriving people amongst us.

Swift.

CUSTOMABLE, adj. [from custom.] Common; habitual; frequent.

CUSTOMABLENESS, n. f. [from customable.]

1. Frequency; habit.

2. Conformity to custom.

CUSTOMABLY, adv. [from customable.] According to custom.

Kingdoms have customably been carried away by right of succession, according to proximity of blood.

Hayward.

CUSTOMARILY, adv. [from customary.] Habitually; commonly.

To call God to witness truth, or a lye perhaps, or to appeal to him on every trivial occasion, is a common discourse, customarily without consideration, is one of the highest indignities and affronts that can be offered him.

Ray.

CUSTOMARINESS, n. f. [from customary.] Frequency; commonness; frequent occurrence.

A vice which, for its guilt, may justify the sharpest, and for its customariness, the frequentest invectives which can be made against it.

Government of the Tongue.

CUSTOMARY, adj. [from custom.]

1. Conformable to established custom; according to prescription.

Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul: I have here the customary gown.

Shakespeare.

Several ingenious persons, whose assistance might be conducive to the advance of real and useful knowledge, lay under the prejudices of education and customary belief.

Glennville's Scripps Scientifica.

2. Habitual.

We should avoid the profane and irreverent use of God's name, by cursing, or customary swearing, and take heed of the neglect of his worship, or any thing belonging to it.

Tillotson.

3. Usual; wonted.

Ev'n now I met him

With customary compliment, when he,
Wasting his eyes to th' contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me.

Shakespeare.

CUSTOMED, adj. [from custom.] Usual; common; that to which we are accustomed.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,

No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs.

Shakespeare's King John.

CUSTOMER, n. f. [from custom.]

1. One who frequents any place of sale for the sake of purchasing.

One would think it Overdone's house; for here be many old customers.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

A wealthy poet takes more pains to hire
A flatterer's audience, than poor tradesmen do
To persuade customers to buy their goods.

Posthumus.

Lord Strut has bespoke his liveries at Lewis Baboon's shop: Don't you see how that old fox steals away your customers, and turns you out of your business every day?

Arbuthnot.

Those papers are grown a necessary part in coffeehouse furniture, and may be read by customers of all ranks for curiosity or amusement.

Swift.

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer, which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for.

Swift.

2. A common woman. This sense is now obsolete.

I marry her!—What, a customer? Pr'ythee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome.

Shakespeare's Othello.

CUSTREL, n. f.

1. A buckler-bearer.

2. A vessel for holding wine.

Vol. I. N^o. 12.

To CUT.

CUT

To CUT. pret. cut; part. pass. cut. [probably from the French, couteau, a knife.]

1. To penetrate with an edged instrument; to divide any continuity by a sharp edge.

Ah, cut my lace asunder,
That my great heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead killing news.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
And when two hearts were join'd by mutual love,

The sword of justice cuts upon the knot,
And fevers 'em for ever. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Some I have cut away with scissars.

Wise man's Surgery.

2. To hew.
Thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon.

3. To carve; to make by sculpture.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?

Shakespeare.
The triumphal is defaced by time; but the plan of it is neatly cut upon the wall of a neighbouring building. Addison.

4. To form any thing by cutting.
And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Ex. xxxix. 3.

Before the whistling winds the vessels fly,
With rapid swiftness cut the liquid way,
And reach Gerestus at the point of day.

6. To pierce with any uneasy sensation.
The man was cut to the heart with these confusions. Addison.

7. To divide packs of cards.
Supine they in their heav'n remain,
Exempt from passion and from pain;
And frankly leave us, human elves,
To cut and shuffle for ourselves. Prior.

We fare in vain the cards condemn,
Ourselves both cut and shuffled them. Prior.
Take a fresh pack, nor is it worth our grieving
Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving.

8. To intersect; to cross: as, one line cuts another at right angles.

9. To cut down. To fell; to hew down.
All the timber whereof was cut down in the mountains of Saba. Kneller.

10. To cut down. To excel; to overpower; a low phrase.

So great is his natural eloquence, that he cuts down the finest orator, and destroys the best contrived argument, as soon as ever he gets himself to be heard. Addison's Court Tattler.

11. To cut off. To separate from the other parts by cutting.
And they cut him, and cut off his thumbs. Jed. i. 6.

12. To cut off. To destroy; to extirpate; to put to death untimely.

All Spain was first conquered by the Romans, and filled with colonies from them, which were still increased, and the native Spaniards still cut off. Spenser on Ireland.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
This great commander was suddenly cut off by a fatal stroke, given him with a small contemptible instrument.
Ireneus was likewise cut off by martyrdom. Addison.

Ill-fated prince! Too negligent of life!
Cut off in the fresh ripening prime of manhood,
Even in the pride of life. Philips's Disfess Mother.

13. To cut off. To rescind; to separate; to take away.
Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
He that cut off twenty years of life,
Cut off so many years of fearing death.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

CUT

Prefume not on thy God, whose'er he be;
Thee he regards not, owns not, hath cut off Quite from his people. Milton's Agonistes.

The proposal of a recompence from men, cuts off the hopes of future rewards. Smalridge.

14. To cut off. To intercept; to hinder from union or return.

We are concerned to cut off all occasion from those who seek occasion, that they may have whereof to accuse us. Rogers.

17. To cut off. To preclude.

Every one who lives in the practice of any voluntary sin, actually cuts himself off from the benefits and profession of Christianity. Addison.

This only object of my real care,
Cut off from hope, abandon'd to despair,
In some few passing fatal hours is hurl'd
From wealth, from pow'r, from love, and from the world. Prior.

Why should those who wait at alters be cut off from partaking in the general benefits of law, or of nature? Swift.

18. To cut off. To interrupt; to silence.

It is a grace to a judge to shew quickness of conceit in cutting off evidence or counsel too short. Bacon.

19. To cut off. To apostrophise; to abbreviate.

No vowel can be cut off before another, when we cannot link the pronunciation of it. Dryden.

20. To cut out. To shape; to form.

By the pattern of my own thoughts I cut out the purity of his. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

I, for my part, do not like images cut out in juniper, or other garden stuff: they be for children. Bacon.

There is a large table at Montmorency cut out of the thickness of a vine-stock. Temple.

The antiquaries being but indifferent taylors, they wrangle prodigiously about cutting out the toga. Araratius on Coins.

They have a large forest cut out into walks, extremely thick and gloomy. Addison.

21. To cut out. To scheme; to contrive.

Having a most pernicious fire kindled within the very bowels of his own forest, he had work enough cut him out to extinguish it. Howell.

Every man had cut out a place for himself in his own thoughts: I could reckon up in our army two or three lord-treasurers. Addison.

22. To cut out. To adapt.

You know I am not cut out for writing a treatise, nor have a genius to pen any thing exactly. Rymer.

23. To cut out. To debar.

I am cut out from any thing but common acknowledgments, or common discourse. Pope.

24. To cut out. To excel; to outdo.

25. To cut short. To hinder from proceeding by sudden interruption.

Thus much he spoke, and more he would have said, But the stern hero turn'd aside his head,
And cut him short. Dryden's Æneid.

Achilles cut him short; and thus replied,
My worth allow'd in words, is in effect deny'd. Dryden.

26. To cut short. To abridge: as the soldiers were cut short of their pay.

27. To cut up. To divide an animal into convenient pieces.

A man may as reasonably draw cuts for his tenets, and regulate his persuasion by the cast of a die. Locke.

8. A near passage, by which some angle is cut off.

The ignorant took heart to enter upon this great calling, and instead of their cutting their way to it through the knowledge of the tongues, the fathers and councils, they have taken another and a shorter cut. Saut.

There is a shorter cut, an easier passage. Decay of Piety.

The evidence of my sense is simple and immediate, and therefore I have but a shorter cut thereby to the assent to the truth of the things so evidenced. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

But the gentleman would needs see me part of my way, and carry me a short cut through his own ground, which saved me half a mile's riding. Swift's Examiner.

9. A picture cut or carved upon a stamp of wood or copper, and impressed from it.

In this form, according to his description, he is set forth in the prints or cuts of martyrs by Covalerius. Brown.

It is, I believe, used improperly by Addison.

Madame Dacier, from some old cuts of Terence, fancies that the larva or persona of the Roman actors was not only a vizard for the face, but had false hair to it. Addison on Italy.

10. The stamp on which a picture is carved, and by which it is impressed.

11. The act or practice of dividing a pack of cards.

How

CUT

How can the muse her aid impart,
Unskill'd in all the terms of art!
Or in harmonious numbers put
The deal, the shuffle, and the cut. Swift.
12. Fashion; form; shape; manner of cutting into shape.

Their cloths are after such a Pagan cut too,
That, sure, they've worn out Christendom.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

His tawny beard was th' equal grace
Both of his wisdom and his face;
In cut and dye so like a tile,

A sudden view it would beguile. Hadibras.
They were so familiarly acquainted with him
as to know the very cut of his beard. Stillingfleet.

Children love breeches, not for their cut or ease, but because the having them is a mark or step towards manhood. Locke.

A third desires you to observe well the toga on such a reverse, and asks you whether you can in conscience believe the sleeve of it to be of the true Roman cut. Addison.

Sometimes an old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity.

Addison's Spectator.

Wilt thou buy there some high heads of the newest cut for my daughter?

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

12. It seems anciently to have signified a fool or cully. To cut still signifies to cheat, in low language.

Send her money, knight: if thou hast her not in the end, call me cut. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

14. CUT and long tail. A proverbial expression for men of all kinds; it is borrowed from dogs.

He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—
Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail, under the degree of a squire.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

At quintin he,

In honour of this bridalee,

Hath challeng'd either wide countee:

Come cut and long tail; for there be

Six batchelors as bold as he.

Ben Jonson's Underwood.

CUTANEOUS. adj. [from cutis, Lat.] Relating to the skin.

This ferrous, nutritious mass is more readily circulated into the cutaneous or remotest parts of the body. Floyer on Humours.

Some sort of cutaneous eruptions are occasioned by feeding much on acid unripe fruits and farina-ceous substances. Arbutnot.

CUTTICLE. n. f. [cuticula, Latin.]

1. The first and outermost covering of the body, commonly called the scarf-skin. This is that soft skin which rises in a blister upon any burning, or the application of a blistering-plaster. It sticks close to the surface of the true skin, to which it is allotted by the vessels which nourish it, though they are so small as not to be seen. When the scarf-skin is examined with a microscope, it appears to be made up of several lays of exceeding small scales. Quincy.

In each of the very fingers there are bones and gristles, and ligaments and membranes, and muscles and tendons, and nerves and arteries, and veins and skin, and cuticle and nail.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. A thin skin formed on the surface of any liquor.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to cuticle,
and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures;
which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances in rank and file. Newton's Opticks.

CUTICULAR. adj. [from cutis, Latin.] Belonging to the skin.

CUT, signifies knowledge or skill. So Cuthberia is a knowing conqueror; Cuthred a knowing counsellor; Cuthbert, famous for skill. Much of the same nature are Sophocles and Sophianos.

Gibson's Camden.

CUTLASS. n. f. [cutelas, French. This word is written sometimes, cutlase, sometimes cutlax:
in Shakespeare, cutlaxe; and in Pope, cutlase.] A broad cutting sword: the word is much in use among the seamen.

CUT

Were't not better

That I did suit me all points like a man?

A gallant cutlaxe upon my thigh,

A boar-spear in my hand.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

To the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the sun;
Of two his cutlase launch'd the spouting blood,
These quarter'd, sing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood. Pope.

CUTLER. n. f. [cutelier, French.] One who makes or sells knives.

A poultry ring

That she did give, whose pokey was

For all the world like cutler's poetry

Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not.

Shakespeare.

In a bye cutler's shop he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt. Watson.

He chose no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler.

Clarendon.

CUTPURSE. n. f. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method of cutting purses: a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief; a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A vice of kings,

A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,

That from the shelf the precious diadem stole,

And put it in his pocket. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Was there no felony, no bawd,

Cutpurse, nor burglary abroad? Hadibras.

If we could imagine a whole nation to be cutpurses and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves. Bentley's Sermons.

CUTTER. n. f. [from cut.]

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing.

2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.

3. [Inisores.] The teeth that cut the meat.

The molares, or grinders are behind, nearest the centre of motion, because there is a greater strength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the grinders.

Ray on the Creation.

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them: and then casts the same into the court to be written upon. Cowel.

CUT-THROAT. n. f. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an affa-sin.

Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, base people, gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas? Kneller.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the horriddest instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South.

The Russian robbers by no justice aw'd,

And unpaid cut-throat soldiers are abroad;

Those venal souls, who, harden'd in each ill,

To save complaints and prosecution, kill.

Dryden's Farnal.

CUT-THROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CUTTING. n. f. [from cut.] A piece cut off;
a chop.

The burning of the cuttings of vines, and casting them upon land, doth much good.

Bacon's Natural History.

CYL

Many are propagated above ground by slips or cuttings. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. f. [Sepia.] A fish, which, when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquour, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray on the Creation.

CUTTLE. n. f. [from cuttle.] A foul-mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hammer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this wine I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, if you play the faucy cuttle with me. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

CYCLE. n. f. [cyclas, Latin; κύκλος.]

1. A circle.

2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to style a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof.

Holler on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method, continued till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavoured to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year.

Evelyn's Calendar.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild, contrive
To save appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentrick, scrib'd o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb! Milton.

CYCLOID. n. f. [from κύκλος, of κύκλος and εἶδος, shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

CYCLOIDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance.

Chambers.

CYCLOPEDIA. n. f. [κύκλος and παιδεία.] A circle of knowledge; a course of the sciences.

CYGNET. n. f. [from cygnus, Latin.] A young swan.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death.

Shakespeare's King John.

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Cygnets, from grey, turn white.

Bacon's Natural History.

Young cygnets are good meat, if fattened with oats; but fed with weeds, they taste fishy.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CYLINDER. n. f. [κύλινδρος.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular.

The quantity of water which every revolution does carry, according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found. Wilkins.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bases, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylinder for vaulted turrets, and round buildings. Prædium.

CYLINDRICAL. adj. [from cylinder.] Partaking of the nature of a cylinder;
having the form of a cylinder.

Minera ferri stalactitia, when several of the cylindrick fibres are contiguous, and grow together into one sheaf, is called bruchiron ore.

Woodward's Natural History.

Obstructions must be most incident to such parts of the body where the circulation and the elastic fibres are both smallest, and those are glands, which are the extremities of arteries formed into cylindrical canals. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CYN

CYMAR. n. f. [properly written finar.] A slight covering; a scarf.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,

Her body shaded with a slight cymar; Her bosom to the view was only bare. Dryden.

CYMATIUM. n. f. [Lat. from κύματιν, a little wave.] A member of architecture, whereof one half is convex, and the other concave. There are two sorts, of which one is hollow below, as the other is above. Harris.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions, or dentelli, make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spettator.
CYMBAL. n. f. [cymbalum, Latin.] A musical instrument.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fifes, Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans, Make the fun dance. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If mirth should fail, I'll busy her with cares, Silence her clamorous voice with louder wars; Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,

As founding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon. Dryden's Alexander.

CYNANTHROPY. n. f. [from κύων, a dog, and άνθρωπος, a man.] A species of madness in which men have the qualities of dogs.

CYNARCTOMACHY. [from κύων, a dog, and μάχη, a fight.] A word coined by Baile, to denote bear-beating with a dog.

That some occult design doth lye In bloody cynarctomachy,

Is plain enough to him that knows, How faints lead brothers by the nose. Hudib.

CYNETICS. n. f. [from κύνειον, a dog.] The art of hunting; the art of training and hunting with dogs.

There are extant in Greek, four books of cyn-geticks, or venation. Brown's Tug-of-War.

CYP

CYNICAL. } adj. [from κύων, a dog.] Having the qualities of a dog; curiish; brutal; snarling; satirical.

He doth believe that some new fangled wit (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art. Wilkins.

CYNICK. n. f. [from κύων, a dog.] A philosopher of the snarling or curiish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How vilely doth this cynick rhyme?— Get you hence, firrah: faucy fellow, hence. Shakespeare.

Without these precautions the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows fullen and morose, the woman impertinent and fantastical. Addison.

CYNOSURE. n. f. [from κύων, a dog, and σῦρα, a chain.] The star near the North pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it fees Bofom'd high in tufted trees,

Where perhaps some beauty lies, The cynsure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CYON. See CYON.

CYPRUS-TREE. n. f. [from κύπρος, Cyprus, Lat.]

1. The cypriss is a tall strait tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use: its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies. The cypriss-tree is always green, and never either rots or is worm-eaten. Calm.

In ivory coffers I have stuf my crowns; In cypriss chests my arras counterpanes. Shakef.

He taketh the cypriss and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. Jf. xlv. 14.

CZA

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd, And nodding cypriss form'd a fragrant shade. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink, Their sweetest shade a grove of cypriss trees. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

CYPRUS. n. f. [I suppose from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypriss, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Lawn as white as driven snow, Cyprus black as'er was crow. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A cyprus, not a bosom, Hides my poor heart. Shakespeare.

CYST. } n. f. [from κύστις, a bag.] A bag containing some morbid matter.

CYSTIS. } In taking it out the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a meliceris. Wiseman's Surgery.

There may be a consumption, with a purulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated. Arbutnot on Ditt.

CYSTICK. adj. [from κύστις, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts; the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall; or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbutnot.

CYSTOTOMY. n. f. [from κύστις, a bag, and τομή, a cutting.] The act or practice of opening incysted tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

CZAR. n. f. [A Slavonian word, written more properly czar.] The title of the emperor of Russia.

CZARINA. n. f. [from czar.] The empress of Russia.

D.

DAB

D is a consonant nearly approaching in sound to T, but formed by a stronger appulse of the tongue, to the upper part of the mouth. The sound of D in English is uniform, and it is never mute.

DA CAPP. [Ital.] A term in musick, which signifying from the head or the beginning, means that the first part of the tune should be repeated at the conclusion.

To DAB. v. a. [dauber, Fr.] To strike gently with something soft or moist.

To DA'BBLE. v. n. [dabbelen, Dutch.] To smear; to daub; to spatter; to besprinkle; to wet.

A shadow like an angel, with bright hair Dabbled in blood. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I scarified, and dabbled the wound with oil of turpentine. Wiseman's Surgery.

Mean while the South, rising with dabbled wings, A sable cloud athwart the welkin flings. Swift.

To DA'BBLE. v. n.

1. To play in water; to move in water or mud.

Neither will a spirit, that dwells with stars, dabble in this impurer mud. Glaville's Apology.

The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them. L'Estrange.

But when he found the boys at play, And saw them dabbled in their clay,

He stood behind a stall to lurk, And mark the progress of their work. Swift.

2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakespeare shall be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them; though you, I think, have been dabbling here and there with the text, I have had more reverence for the writer, and the printer, and left every thing standing. Attorney to Pope.

DA'BBLER. n. f. [from dabble.]

DAD

1. One that plays in water.

2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.

He dares not complain of the tooth-ach, lest our dabblers in politicks should be ready to swear against him for disaffection. Swift.

DACE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation: in most provinces called dare. Lucifcus.] A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the brink Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place;

Where I may see my quill or cork down sink, With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace. Walton.

DACTYLE. n. f. [δακτύλος, a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger; as candides.

DAD. } n. f. [The child's way of expressing father.]

DA'DDY. } ing father. It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a and d, or the kindred letter d differently placed; as tad, Welsh; āta, Greek; atta, Gothick; tata, Lat.]

Father.

I was never so bethumpt with words, Since first I call'd my brother's father dad. Shak.

His loving mother left him to my care; Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare! Gay.

To

To DADE. v. a. To hold up by a leading string.

The little children when they learn to go,
By painful mothers daded to and fro. Drayton.

DA'DAL. adj. [dadalus, Latin.]

2. Skilful: this is not the true meaning, nor should be imitated.

Nor hath

The dadal hand of nature only pour'd
Her gifts of outward grace. Philips.

DA'FFODIL. } n. f. [Supposed by DA'FFODILLY. } Skinner to be cor-DA'FFODOWNDI'LLY. } rupted from aspho- delus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which encircle its middle like a crown; but the empalement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

Strew me the green ground with daffadownillies,
And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies. Spenser.

Bid Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat herse where Lycid lies. Milton.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead

For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:
The short narcissus and fair daffodil,
Pancies to please the fight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryden.

To DAFT. v. a. [contracted from do oft; that is, to throw back, to throw off.] To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly. Not now in use.

The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that dapt the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

I would the had bestow'd this dotage on me; I would have dapt all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakespeare.

DAG. n. f. [daguer, French.]

1. A dagger.
2. A handgun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

DA'GGER. n. f. [daguer, French.]

1. A short sword; a poniard.
She ran to her son's dagger, and struck herself a mortal wound. Sidney.

This sword a dagger had his page,
That was but little for his age;
And therefore waited on him so,
As dwarfs upon knight-errants do. Hudibras.

He strikes himself with his dagger; but being interrupted by one of his friends, he stabs him, and breaks the dagger on one of his ribs. Addison.

2. [In fencing-schools.] A blunt blade of iron with a basket hilt, used for defence.

3. [With printers.] The obelus; a mark of reference in form of a dagger; as [+]

DA'GGERDRAWING. n. f. [dagger and draw.] The act of drawing daggers; approach to open violence.

They always are at daggersdrawing,
And one another clapper-clawing. Hudibras.
I have heard of a quarrel in a tavern, where all were at daggersdrawing, till one desired to know the subject of the quarrel. Swift.

To DA'GGLE. v. a. [from dag, dew; a word, according to Mr. Lye, derived from the Danish; according to Skinner, from dag, sprinkled, or teagan, to dip. They are probably all of the same root.] To dip negligently in mire or water; to bemire; to besprinkle.

To DA'GGLE. v. n. To be in the mire; to run through wet or dirt.

Nor like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down. Pope.

DA'GGLETAIL. n. f. [daggle and tail.] Bemired; dipped in the water or mud; bespattered.

The gentlemen of wit and pleasure are apt to be choaked at the sight of so many daggletail parsons, that happen to fall in their way. Swift.

DA'ILY. adj. [daglic, Saxon.] Happening every day, or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.

Much are we bound to heaven
In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince. Shakespeare.

Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief
From daily trouble, and continu'd grief. Prior.

DA'ILY. adv. Every day; very often.
Let that man with better sense advise,
That of the world least part to us is read;
And daily how through hardy enterprize,
Many great regions are discovered. Fairy Queen.

A man with whom I conversed almost daily,
For years together. Dryden.

DA'INTILY. adv. [from dainty.]
1. Elegantly; delicately.
Truth is naked and open daylight, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries, and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candle-light. Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.
There is no region on earth so daintily watered, with such great navigable rivers. Horwell's Vocal Forest.

Those young suiters had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well, and fare daintily. Broome's View of Epic Poems.

3. Nicely; ceremoniously; scrupulously.
4. Squeamishly; fastidiously.

DA'INTINESS. n. f. [from dainty.]
1. Delicacy; softness.
What should yet thy palate please?
Daintiness and softer ease,
Sleeked limbs and finest blood? Ben Jonson.

2. Elegancy; nicety.
The duke exceeded in the daintiness of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands. Watson.

3. Delicacy; deliciousness.
It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the majesty of the dish. Hokewell on Providence.

4. Squeamishness; fastidiousness.
Of sand, and lime, and clay, Vitruvius hath discoursed without any daintiness. Watson.

5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DA'INTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleasing to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.
Higher concoction is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry. Bacon.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.
This is the flowest, yet the daintiest sense;
For ev'n the ears of such as have no skill,
Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;
And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill. Davies.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.
Which of you all
Will now deny to dance? she that makes dainty, I'll swear hath corns. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.

And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.

My house, within the city,
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands. Shakespeare.

Why should you be so cruel to yourself,
And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent
For gentle usage, and soft delicacy? Milton.

5. Nice; affectedly fine; in contempt.
Your dainty speakers have the curle,
To plead bad causes down to woe. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. f.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs, xxiii. 3.

A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

She then produc'd her dairy store,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.

The shepherd swains, with sure abundance blest,
In the fat flock, and rural dainties feast. Pope.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.
Why, that's my dainty; I shall miss thee:
But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shakespeare. Temp.

There is a fortune coming Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And fet thee aloft. Ben Jonson.

DA'IRY. n. f. [from dey, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Grounds were turned much in England either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter. Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

You have no more worth
Than the coarse and country dairy, Ben Jonson.

That doth haunt the hearth of dairy. Ben Jonson.

What stores my dairies and my folds contain!
A thousand lambs that wander on the plain. Dry.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store. Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milk cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well housewived, are exceeding commodious. Bacon.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh. Bacon.

DA'IRYMAID. n. f. [dairy and maid.] The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch,
To know their fortunes, equal to the rich;
The dairymaid enquires if she shall take
The trusty taylor, and the cook forsake. Dryden.

Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairy-maids. Addison.

DA'ISY. n. f. [dagereaze, day's eye. Chaucer.]

A Spring-flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is fealy and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads after the petals are fallen off, resemble obtuse cones. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all over white,
And cuckow buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

As he passed, the woods put forth their blossoms, the earth her primroses and daisy-eyes to behold him. Horace.

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring;
Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground. Pope.

This will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;
The daisy, primrose, violet. Thomson.

DAL. n. f. [dali, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long tost with storms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wandered many a wood, and measured many a vale. Fairy Queen.

Before the downfall of the fairy state,
This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,
This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd. T. Kell.

He steals along the lonely dale. Thomson's Spring.

DA'LLIANCE. n. f. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness. Lock.

D A M

Look thou to be true: do not give dalliance
Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw
To th' fire o' th' blood. Shakespeare's Temp.

Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as befits Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league, Alone as they. Milton.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er;
My warlike spirits work now another way,
And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.

2. Conjugal conversation.
The giant, self-dismayed with the sound,
Where he with his Ducissa dalliance found,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'r.
Fairy Queen.

That bower not mystick, where the sapient
king

Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse. Mil.
Thou claim'st me for thy fire,
And my fair son here show'st me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton.

3. Delay; procrastination.
Both wind and tide flay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame have held him here too long.—
—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise. Shakespeare.

DA'LLIER. n. f. [from dally.] A trifter; a fowler.

The daily dallies with pleasant words, with smiling countenances, and with wagers, purposed to be lost, before they were purposed to be made.
Johnson.

DA'LLOP. n. f. [of unknown etymology.] A tuft, or clump; not in use.

Of barley the finest and greenest ye find,
Leave standing in dallies till time you do bind.
Tupper.

To DALLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]
1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to loose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.

Take up thy master:
If thou should'st dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shakespeare's King Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake.
Calamy's Sermons.

One hundred thousand pounds must be raised;
for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton;
to fondle.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees in meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shakespeare.
3. To sport; to play; to frolic.
She her airy buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the fun.
Shakespeare.

4. To delay.
They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wisdom, xii. 26.

To DA'LLY. v. a. To put off: to delay; to amuse till a proper opportunity.
He set down to perform service; not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes. Knolly's History.

DAM. n. f. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperor,
Julius never his dame have be flaine. Chaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loss.
Shakespeare.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers; Alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange.

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Key.
2. A human mother: in contempt or detesta-
tion.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
DAM. n. f. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams that like a skreen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams with unresisted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cots away. Dryden.

Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry store,
Bear down the dams and open every door. Dryden.
The inside of the dam must be very smooth and streight; and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To DAM. v. a. [demman, pope demman, Sax.
dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or shut up water by moles or dams.

I'll have the current of this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring.
Orway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, bent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;
As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,

And wond'ring at their banks in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakespeare of fire, and by Mil- ton of light.

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns.
Shakespeare.

Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, from gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long level'd rule of streaming light.
Milton.

DA'MAGE. n. f. [domage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.
Gross errors and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune.
Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual cess and extortion.
He repulsed the enemy very much to their da- mage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd!
3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.
Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue for damages in a court of justice. Aldison.

5. [In law.] Any hurt or hindrance that a man

taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to inquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their con-sciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit and damages, which contain the hindrance which the plaintiff or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowel.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts.

To DA'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addison.

To DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be da- amaged.

DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.]
1. Susceptible of hurt; as, damageable goods.
2. Mischiefous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable, and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

DA'MASCENE. n. f. [damsceenus, from Damascus.]
A small plum; a damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry tree in blossom, the damascene and plum trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear plums and damascenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DAMASK. n. f. [damasquin, French; damas- chino, Ital. from Damascus.]

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which, part by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boast
In diaper, damask, or in lyne. Spenser.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some deale perplexed was her spirit;
Her damask late, now chang'd to purest white.
Fairfax.

To DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.
2. To variegate; to diversify.

They fat recline
On the soft downy banks, damask'd with flowers. Milton.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures; practised,
I suppose, first at Damascus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. f. The rose of Damascus;
a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks,
Nor shower'd from every bush, the damask-rose.
Thomson.

DA'MASKENING. n. f. [from damsquin, Fr.]
The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DAME. n. f. [dame, French; dama, Spanish.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady; but in common use, now a-days, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts's Logic.
Bless

D A M

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect.

Shakespeare.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife.

Shakespeare.

Shut your mouth, dame. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame! Milton.

2. It is still used in poetry for women of rank.

His father Faunus: a Laurentian dame Dryden.

His mother, fair Marcia was her name.

Who would not repeat that bliss,

And frequent sight of such a dame

Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Women in general.

We've willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many,
As will to greatness dedicate themselves.

Shakespeare.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. f. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Miller.

To DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon.

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power, that he might not be ignorant of it, should not damn him.

South's Sermons.

3. To condemn.

His own impartial thought

Will damn, and conscience will record the fault.

Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend

To clap with such who fools and knaves commend.

Dryden.

For the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone

To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

You are so good a critic, that it is the greatest happinefs of the modern poets that you do not hear their works; and next, that you are not to arrant a critic as to damn them, like the rest, without hearing. Pope.

DAMNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepar'd, unfit for death;
And, to transport him in the mind he is,

Were damnable. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

As he does not reckon every schism of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

Oh thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee
by the nose for thy speeches?

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

DAMNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them? South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more sweets they bestowed upon them, the more damnably their conferves stunk. Devin.

DAMNATION. n. f. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

D A M

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle.

Taylor's Worth Communicant.

Now mince the sin,

And mollify damnation with a phrase:

Say you consented not to Sancho's death,

But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

DAMNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DAMNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hateful; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

Not in the legions

Of horrid hell can come a devil more damnd

In evils to top Macbeth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be

A couch for luxury and damned incest.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But, oh, what damned minutes tells he o'er,
Who doubts, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves. Shakespeare.

Dare not

To brand the spotless virtue of my prince

With falsehoods of most base and damnd contrivance. Rowe.

DAMNIFIC. adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loss; mischievous.

To DAMNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Latin.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cause loss to any.

He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit satisfaction: the damned person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self-preservation. Locke.

2. To hurt; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly rear,

As if late fight had nought him damnd'd,

He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear.

Fairy Queen.

DAMNINGNESS. n. f. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [damp, Dutch.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.

She said no more: the trembling Trojans hear,
O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear.

Dryden.

2. Dejected; funk; depressed.

All these and more came flocking, but with looks

Downcast and damp: yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton.

A DAMP. n. f.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

Night; not now, as ere man fell,

Wholesome and cool, and mild; but with black air

Accompany'd, with damps and dreadful gloom.

Milton.

A rift there was, which from the mountain's height

Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light,
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,

A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the sun in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time, when the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recov'ring, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,

To Michael thus his humble words address'd.

Milton.

His name struck every where so great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp.

1.

Roocommon.

D A N

Ev'n now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,

A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts.

Addison.

An eternal state, he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever; a prospect enough to cast a damp over his sprightliest hours. Rogers.

This commendable repentment against me, strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift.

To DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.

2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp
the relish of another. L'Estrange.

Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and like the hand-writing on the wall, damps
all his jollity. Atterbury.

It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to discourage.

A soft body dampeth the sound much more than a hard. Bacon.

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to discourage;
to dull.

Ufury dulls and damps all industries, improvements, and new inventions, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

Unless an age too late, or cold

Climate or years, damp my intended wing.

Depress'd. Milton.

DAMPISHNESS. n. f. [from damp.] Tendency to wetness; fogginess; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness.

Bacon.

DAMPNESS. n. f. [from damp.] Moisture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky
Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly;

'Twas only water thrown on sails too dry. Dryd.

By stacks they have often a very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils
it. Mortimer.

DAMPY. adj. [from damp.] Dejected; gloomy; forrowful.

The lords did dispel dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and sports. Hayward.

DAMSEL. n. f. [domisella, Fr.]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction; now used only in verse.

Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore,
And one mad damsel dares dispute my pow'r. Prior.

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damsels she was gone
In shady walks, the scorching heat to shun. Dryd.

3. A wench; a country lass.

The clowns are whoremasters, and the damsels with child. Gay.

DAMSON. n. f. [corruptly from damascene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsons,
And made me climb with danger of my life.

Shakespeare.

DAN. n. f. [from dominus, as now don in Spanish, and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men; as we now say Master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Dan Chaucer well of English undefiled.

Douglas.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid. Shak.

Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,
Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me. Prior's Alman.

To DANCE. v. n. [danser, Fr. dançar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabic, a dance; as junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from tanais.]

1. To

1. To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Penton? He capers, he dance, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakespeare.

To DANCE. transitive. v. a. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lands, than to tarry the good leisure of their own magistracies. Raleigh's Essays.
It upbraids you

To let your father's friend, for three long months, Thus dance attendance for a word of audience. Dryden.

To DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandfire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shakespeare.

That I see thee here,

Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Beside my threshold. Shakespeare.

In pestilence the malignity of the infecting vapour dances the principal spirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by music.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak of Herne the hunter. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else: for then a man leads the dance. Bacon.
But you perhaps expect a modest feast,
With am'rous songs and wanton dances grac'd. Dryden.

DANCE. n. f. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook
The lean and wrinkled Cælius. Shakespeare.

Musicians and dancers! take some truce
With these your pleasing labours: for great use
As much wearisome as perfection brings. Donne.
The ear was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Watson.

It is a usual practice for our funambulous, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like to flying. Wilkins.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope,
And balances your fear and hope. Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art;
And, vex'd, I found that the musician's hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command. Prior.

DANCINGMASTER. n. f. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their ape's tricks by a dancingmaster. Leffrange.

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought, or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Understanding.

DANCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [dancing and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing-school,
And teach lavolta's high, and swift couranto's;
Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shakespeare.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-school for the instruction of apes of quality. Leffrange.

DANDELION. n. f. [dans le lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all respects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;
For Blouzelinda, blithesome maid, is dead! Gay's Pastorals.

DANDIPRAT. n. f. [dandin, French.] A little fellow; an archin: a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

To DANDLE. v. a. [dandeln, Dutch.]
1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her sides, and be dandl'd upon her knees. Shakespeare.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprites,
Oft skipt into our chamber those sweet nights,
And, kiss'd and dandl'd on thy father's knee,
Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see. Donne.

Courts are but superficial schools
To dandle fools. Bacon.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw Dandl'd the kid. Milton.

Motion occasions sleep, as we find by the common use of rocking forward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurses arms. Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.
Their child shall be advanc'd,
And be receiv'd for the emperor's heir;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own. Shakespeare.

They have put me in a silk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap; I am ashamed to be dandl'd thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turned into such a little pretty maffer. Addison's Guardian.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles: not in use.

Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service, as if they would not have the enemy subdued. Spenser.

DANDLER. n. f. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DANDRUFF. n. f. [often written dandriff, from zan, the itch, and druf, fordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DANEWORT. n. f. A species of elder; called also dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DANGER. n. f. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from dammun, Nenage from angaria, Minthoro from dan, death, to which Janus seems inclined.] Risque; hazard; peril.
They that sail on the sea, tell of the danger. Ecclus. xliii. 24.

Our craft is in danger to be set at nought. Acts, x. 27.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shakespeare.

More danger now from man alone we find,
Than from the rocks, the billows, and the wind. Waller.

To DANGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's son stands up
For the main soldier; whose quality going on,
The fides o' th' world may danger. Shakespeare.

DANGERLESS. adj. [from danger.] Without hazard; without risque; exempt from danger.

He sheweth no less magnanimity in dangerless despising, than others in dangerous affecting the multiplying of kingdoms. Sidney.

DANGEROUS. adj. [from danger.] Hazardous; perilous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city. Ecclus. ix.

All men counsel me to take away thy life, like-ly to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects. Sidney.

Already we have conquer'd half the war,
And the less dangerous part is left behind. Dryden.

DANGEROUSLY. adv. [from dangerous.] Hazardously; perilously; with danger.

But for your son, believe it, oh, believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A sort of naughty persons
Have practis'd dangerously against your state,

Dealing with witches and with conjurers. Shakespeare.
It is just with God to permit those, which think they stand so surely, to fall most dangerously. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Plutarch says, Telephila, a noble lady, being dangerously sick, was advis'd to apply her mind to poetry. Peacbam.

If it were so; which but to think were pride,
My constant love would dangerously be tried. Dryden.

DANGEROUSNESS. n. f. [from dangerous.] Danger; hazard; peril.

I shall not need to mind you of judging of the dangerousness of diseases, by the nobleness of that part affected. Boyle.

To DANGLE. v. n. [from hang, according to Skinner; as hang, hangle, dangle.] To hang loose and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yond dangling apriocks. Shakespeare.

He'd rather on a gibbet dangle,
Than miss his dear delight to wrangle. Hudibras.

Codrus had but one bed; so short to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out. Dryden.

With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe. Smith.

But have you not with thought beheld
The sword hang dangling o'er the shield. Prior.

2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, useles, harmless follower.

The prebiterians, and other fanatics that dangle after them, are well inclined to pull down the present establishment. Swift.

DANGLER. n. f. [from dangle.] A man that hangs about women only to waste time.

A dangler is of neither sex. Raph.

DANK. adj. [from tunken, Germ. Skinner.] Damp; humid; moist; wet.

He her the maiden sleeping found,
On the dank and dirty ground. Shakespeare.

Yet oft they quit
The dank, and, rising on stiff pinions, tow'r
The mid aerial sky. Milton.

Through each thicket, dank or dry,
Like a black mist, low creeping, he held on His midnight fearch. Milton.

Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,
Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a fullen day? Milton.

By the rusby-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays. Milton.

Me, in my vow'd
Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and drooping weeds
To the stern god of sea. Milton.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather. Grew.

DANKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

They bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
There left me. Shakespeare.

To DAP. v. n. [corrupted from dip.] To let fall gently into the water: a word, I believe, only used by anglers.

I have taught him how to catch a chub by dapping with a grasshopper. Waller.

DAPATICAL. adj. [from dapaticus, Latin.] Sumptuous in cheer. Bailey.

DAPPER. adj. [dapper, Dutch.] Little and active; lively without bulk. It is usually spoken in contempt.

And on the tawny sands and shelves,
Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves. Milton.

A pert dapper spark of a magpye, fancied the birds would never be governed 'till himself should sit at the helm. Leffrange.

DAPPERLING. n. f. [from dapper.] A dwarf; a dandiprat.

DAPPLE. adj. [from apple; as pommel.] Marked with various colours; variegated; streaked; imbricated; it is used chiefly of animals.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a lame horse, 'till they have run over all beings that are, and then pitch on dapple. Locke.

To DAPPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To streak; to vary; to diversify with colours.

But under him a grey steed did he weild,
Whose sides with dappl'd circles were endight. Spenser.

The gentle day
Dapple: the drowfy east with spots of grey. Shakespeare.
Horses

DAR

Horses that are dappled, turn white; and old squirrels turn grizzly. Bacon.

The lark begins his flight,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise. Milton.

The dapp'd pink, and blushing rose Deck my charming Chloe's hair. Prior.

The gods, to curse Pamela with her pray'rs,
Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares. Pope.

DAR. n. f. A fish found in the Severn.

DART. f. Bailey. Dart is the same with dare.

To DARE. v. n. pret. I durst; the preterite I dared belongs to the active dare; part. I have dared. [deapyan, Saxon, derren, Dutch.] To have courage for any purpose; not to be afraid; to adventure; to be adventurous.

Durst thou be as good as thy word now?—
Why, Hal, thou know'st, as thou art but a man,
I dare; but as thou art a prince, I fear thee. Shakespeare.

I dare do all that may become a man;

Who dares do more, is none. Shakespeare.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing advent'rously. Shakespeare.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare
any dangerous fact. Haywood.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul. Dryden.

Deliberate and well-weighed courage knows both to be cautious and to dare, as occasion offers. Dryden.

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine, 'till it be very fully examined. Watts.

To DARE. v. a. pret. I dared, not I durst. To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life

Did hear a challeng' urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms. Shakespeare.

Here the stands:

Take but possession of her with a touch;
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love. Shakespeare.

He had many days come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, daring them to fight. Knolles.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare Providence to the face. South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;
And dare all heat but that in Celia's eyes. Roscommon.

Time; I dare thee to discover
Such a youth, and such a lover. Dryden.

Prefumptuous wretch; with mortal art to dare
Immortal power, and brave the thunderer. Granville.

To DARE Larks. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, or by keeping a bird of prey hovering aloft, which keeps them in amaze 'till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks. Carew.

As larks lie durst to shun the hobby's flight. Dryden.

DARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Defiance; challenge.

Sextus Pompeius

Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea. Shakespeare.

DARE. n. f. A small fish, the same with dace.
Leuciscus.

DAREFUL. adj. [dare and full.] Full of defiance; not in use.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,

And beat them backward home. Shak.

DARING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous;
fearless; courageous; intrepid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant. Addison.

The song too daring, and the theme too great.
Prior.

DAR

Grieve not, O daring prince! that noble heart. Pope.

DA'RINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly; cou-rageously; fearlessly; impudently; outrageously.
Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press. Atterbury.

Your brother, firm'd with his success,
Too daringly upon the foe did press. Halifax.

DA'RINGNESS. n. f. [from daring.] Boldness.

DARK. adj. [beopce, Saxon.]

1. Not light; wanting light.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain. Hooker.

Mean time we shall express our darker purpose.
Shakespeare.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

The age, wherein he liv'd, was dark; but he Could not want sight, who taught the world to see. Denham.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All men of dark tempers, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours. Addison on Italy.

DARK. n. f.

1. Darknes; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest fume of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold, hold! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark
Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men Cut off. Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immured, and by curve lines. Holder.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

3. Want of knowledge.

'Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as before. Locke.

To DARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken;
to obscure; to obsolete.

Fair when that cloud of pride, which oft doth dark

Her goodly light, with smiles she drives away. Spenser.

To DA'RKEN. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

Black with furrounding forests then it stood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood. Addison.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write. Pope.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did eldom darken his foresight, especially in things ear hand. Bacon.

3. To foul; to fully.

The lusts and passions of men do fully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence. Tillotson.

To DA'RKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DA'RLING. [a participle, as it seems, from darle

DAR

which yet I have never found; or perhaps a kin of diminutive from dark, as young, youngling.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darling leave me? do not so. Shakespeare.

Darling stands

The varying shore o' th' world. Shakespeare.

The wakeful bird

Sings darling, and, in shadiest covert hid,
Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.

Darling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's
pow'r,

With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd. Dryden.

DA'RLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light; obscurely; blindly; gloomily; uncertainly.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fame to future times conveys but darkly
down.

DA'RKNESS. n. f. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis.

I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. Job.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity; difficultas to the understanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence. Shakespeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded; ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness. Locke.

6. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Colossians.

DA'RKESOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him through a darksome narrow pass
To a broad gate. Spenser.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimmed were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams. Spenser.

You must not look to have an image in any thing lightsome; for even a face in iron, red hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome which shew
the figure. Bacon.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green. Milton.

He here with us to be,

Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay. Milton.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call.
'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital. Dryden.

The darksome pines that o'er you rocks reclin'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.

DA'RLING. adj. [deopling, Sax. diminutive of dear.] Favourite; dear; beloved; regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites. L'Estrang.

Have a care lest some beloved notion or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind. Watts.

DA'RLING. n. f. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,
And his and my lov'd darling. Shakespeare.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,

The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide. Halifax.

She became the darling of the prince. Addison.

To DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.] To
VOL. I. N^o. 12. H mend

D A S

mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.
Will the thy linen wash, or hosen darn? Gay.
He spent every day ten hours in his closet, in darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration. Swift.

DA'RNEL. n. f. [Lolium.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met ev'n now
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare.

Want ye corn for bread?
'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste?
Shakespeare.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
Eat oats and darnel choke the rising corn. Dryden.
To DA'RRAIN. v. a. [This word is by Juvénis referred to dare: it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la bataille.]

1. To prepare for battle; to arrange troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsar-ians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over hand.
Cowley's Survey of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:
Darrain your battle; for they are at hand.
Shakespeare.

2. To apply to the fight, of single combatants.
Therewith they 'gan to harlen greedily,
Redoubted battle ready to darraine. Spenser.

DART. n. f. [dard, French.]

1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, arrow, or lance. Peacock.

O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar
they fling,
The weapons round his hollow temples ring.
Dryden.

2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw offensively.

He whets his tusks, and turns, and dares the war;
Th' invaders dart their jav'lins from afar. Dryden.

2. To throw; to emit; as the sun darts his beams on the earth.
Pan came, and ask'd what magick caus'd my smart;
Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart? Pope.

To DART. v. n.

1. To fly as a dart.

2. To let fly with hostile intention.

Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck. Shakespeare.
To DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word,
in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]

1. To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon.
A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act to unreasonably as the wicked man. Tillotson.

2. To break by collision.

They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.
Shakespeare.

David's throne shall then be like a tree,
Spreading and overhadowing all the earth;
Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash
All monarchies besides throughout the world. Milton.

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Montaigne.
Middling his head, and prone to earth his view,
With ears and chest that dash the morning dew.
Tuckey.

4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.

This tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden treach on't. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

D A S

5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.

At once the brushing oars and brazen prow
Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depths below. Dryden.

6. To mingle; to adulterate; to change by some worse admixture.

Whacum, bred to dash and draw,
Not wine, but more unwholesome law. Hudib.
I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances as may prevent ill-natured applications. Addison.

Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions. Speccator.

7. To form or sketch in haste carelessly.

Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit,
A fool so just a copy of a wit. Pope.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

To dash over this with a line, will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may displease you. Pope.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear; to depress; to suppress.

His tongue
Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear
The better reason, to perplex and dash Maturest counsels. Milton.

Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual, humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd. Milton.

An unknown hand still check'd my forward joy,
Dash'd me with blushes. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

To dash this cavil, read but the practice of Christian emperors. South.

After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South.

Nothing dash'd the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,
Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love. Addison.

Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;
Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prior.
Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star. Pope.

To DASH. v. n.

1. To fly off the surface, by a violent motion.

If the vessel be suddenly stop'd in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel. Cheyne.

2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade, all dashing, fall. Thomson.

3. To rush through water so as to make it fly.

Doer, though without knowing how or why Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,
Through sense and nonsense, never out or in. Dryden.

A DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A Collision.

By the touch ethereal rous'd,
The dash of clouds, or irritating war,
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below
They furious spring. Thomson.

2. Infusion; something worse mingled in a small proportion.

There is nothing which one regards so much with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence, when it has in it a dash of folly. Addison.

3. A mark in writing; a line—, to note a pause, or omission.

He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing.
Brooks's Vulgar Errors.
In modern wit, all printed trash is Set off with num'rous breaks and dashes. Swift.

D A T

4. Sudden stroke; blow; aft: ludicrous.

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile,
—She takes upon her bravely at first dash. Shakespeare.

DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

Hark, hark, the waters fall;
And, with a murmuring sound,
Dash, dash, upon the ground,
To gentle slumber call. Dryden.

DA'STARD. n. f. [astargia, Saxon.] A coward; a poltroon; a man infamous for fear.

The cruelty and envy of the people,
Permitted by our dastard nobles,
And suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Whop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare.

Who now my matchless valour dare oppose?
How long will Dares wait his dastard foes?
Dryden.

Dastard and drunkard, mean and insolent;
Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost, but the last in fight.
Dryden.

Bag-bear thoughts in the minds of children, make them dastards, and afraid of the shadow of darkness ever after. Locke.

Curse on their dastard souls, they stand astonish'd.
Addison.

To DA'STARD. v. a. To terrify; to intimidate;
to desert with cowardice; to dispirit.

I'm weary of this flesh which holds us here,
And dastards manly soul with hope and fear.
Dryden.

To DA'STARDISE. v. a. [from dastard.] To intimidate; to deject with cowardice; to dispirit; to depress; to terrify; to make an habitual coward.

He had such things to urge against our marriage,
As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle.
And dash'd my courage. Dryden.

DA'STARDLY. adj. [from dastard.] Cowardly;
mean; timorous.

Brawl and clamour is so arrant a mark of a dastardly wretch, that he does as good as call himself so that uses it. L'Estrange.

DA'STARDY. n. f. [from dastard.] Cowardli-ness; timorousness.

DA'TARY. n. f. [Datarius.] An officer of the Chancery of Rome, through whose hands bene-fices pass. Dic.

DATE. n. f. [datte, French, from datum, Lat.]

1. The time at which a letter is written, marked at the end or the beginning.

2. The time at which any event happened.

3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.

His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fract'd dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.

My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds, without a date, they say are void.
Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.

What time would spare, from steel receives its date;
And monuments, like men, submit to fate. Pope.

5. Duration; continuance.

Could the declining of this fate, O friend,
Our date to immortality extend? Denham.

Then raise,
From the confluent mafs, purg'd and refin'd,
New heav'ns, new earth, ages of endless date,
Founded in righteousness. Milton.

6. [from datarius.] The fruit of the date-tree.

Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurfe.
—They call for dates and quinces in the pastry. Shakespeare.

DATE-TREE. n. f. See PALM, of which it is a species.

To DATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To note with the time at which any thing is written or done.

'Tis all one, in respect of eternal duration yet behind, whether we begin the world so many millions

lions of ages ago, or date from the late æra of about six thousand years. Bentley.

To all their dated backs he turns you round;
These Aldus printed, those Du Süeil has bound. Pope.

DA'UTELESS. adj. [from date.] Without any fixed term.

The fly-flow hours shall not determinate
The date of limit of thy dear exile. Shakespeare.

DA'TIVE. adj. [dativus, Latin.]

1. [In grammar.] The epithet of the case that signifies the person to whom any thing is given.

2. [In law.] Those are termed dativ executors who are appointed such by the judge's decree; as administrators with us here in England. Ayliffe.

To DAUB. v. a. [dabben, Dutch; dauber, Fr.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.
She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch. Exodus.

2. To paint coarsely.
Hasty daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want false light to set it off. Utray.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too little reflection. Dryden.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece. Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,

He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakespeare.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance, than daubed with cost. Bacon.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and where;

Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.

Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his confidence; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. South.

To DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

I cannot daub it further;
And yet I must. Shakespeare.

DA'UBER. n. f. [from daub.]

1. One that daubs.

2. A coarse low painter.

What they call'd his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas,
Hangs a new angel, two doors from us,
As fine as daubers hands can make it. Swift.

3. A low flatterer.

DA'UBRY. n. f. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as this is beyond our element. Shakespeare.

DA'UBY. adj. [from daub.] Viscous; glutinous; adhesive.

Not in vain th' industrious kind,
With dauby wax and flow'rs the chinks have lin'd. Dryden.

Some the gall'd ropes with dauby marling bind,
Or fear-cloth masts with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

DAUGHTER. n. f. [dauktar, Gothick; dohter, Saxon; dotter, Runick; dohter, German; dochter, Dutch.]

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
With rosy lustre purpled o'er the lawn. Pope.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.

3. A woman.
Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land. Genesis.

4. [In poetry.] Any descendant.

5. The female penitent of a confessor.
Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?
—My leisure serves me, penitence daughter, now. Shakespeare.

To DAUNT. v. n. [domter, French; domitare, Latin.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms through Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.

Where the rude ax, with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt. Milton.

Some preferences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DAUNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakespeare.

Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd:
With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breast. Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DAUNTLESSNESS. n. f. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. f. [supposed by Skinner to be named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from dawl; the German tul and dol, in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] The name of a bird. Menedulu.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daws to peck at. Shakespeare. Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,
The daws, and trees, and rocks should last so long,
When we must in an instant pass to nought. Davies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. f. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Moxon.

To DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, jobb the edge into the stuff, and so dawk it. Moxon.

To DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance towards day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.
I have been troubled in my sleep this night:
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakespeare.

As it began to dawn, towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Matthew.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phœbus shin'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.

A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, hath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear. Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ;
To search the land, but give this day to joy. Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.

These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Thomson.

DAY. n. f. [dag, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Matthew.

Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray;
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackmore.

Or object new Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our days work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight, called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day?
How many days will finish up the year? Shakespeare.

3. Light; sunshine.

Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Romans.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day;
'Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey
Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age: the time. In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reign'd Gutheline his heir,
The justest man, and truest in his days. Fairy Queen.

I think in these days, one honest man is obliged to acquaint another who are his friends. Pope.

We have at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had. Woodward.

5. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural, He never in his days broke his word: that is, in his whole life.

He was never at a loss in his days for a frequent answer. Carte. Life of Ormonde.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.

His name struck fear, his conduct won the day;
He came, he saw, he seiz'd the struggling prey. Roscommon.

The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes you're,
And little is to do. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Would you th' advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win the day? Dryden.

7. An appointed or fixed time.

Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all their terms attend. Dryden.

8. A day appointed for some commemoration.

The field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus. Shakespeare.

9. From day to day; without certainty or continuance.

Bavaria hath been taught, that merit and service doth oblige the Spaniard but from day to day. Bacon.

DAY

TO-DAY. On this day.
To-day, if ye will hear his voice; harden not your hearts. Psalms.

The past is all by death possest,
 And frugal fate that guards the rest,
 By giving, bids us live to-day. Fenton.

DAYBED. n. f. [day and bed.] A bed used for idleness and luxury in the daytime.
 Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come down from a daybed, where I have left Olivia sleeping.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
DAYBOOK. n. f. [from day and book.] A tradesman's journal; a book in which all the occurrences of the day are set down.

DAYBREAK. n. f. [day and break.] The dawn; the first appearance of light.
 I watch'd the early glories of her eyes,
 As men for daybreak watch the Eastern skies.

Dryden.
DAYLABOUR. n. f. [day and labour.] Labour by the day; labour divided into daily tasks.

Doth God exact daylabour, light deny'd,
 I fondly ask? Milton.
Daylabour was but an hard and a dry kind of livelihood to a man, that could get an estate with two or three strokes of his pen. South.

DAYLABOURER. n. f. [from daylabour.] One that works by the day.

In one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn
 That ten daylabourers could not end. Milton.

The daylabourer, in a country village, has commonly but a small pittance of courage. Locke.

DAYLIGHT. n. f. [day and light.] The light of the day, as opposed to that of the moon, or a taper.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
 And yield his room to sad succeeding night.

Fairy Queen.
 Thou shalt buy this dear,
 If ever I thy face by daylight see.

Now go thy way. Shakespeare.
 They, by daylight passing through the Turks fleet, recovered the haven, to the joy of the besieged Christians. Knolles.

He stands in daylight, and disdains to hide
 An act, to which by honour he is ty'd. Dryden.
 Will you murder a man in plain daylight? Dryden.

Though rough bears in covert seek defence,
 White foxes slay, with seeming innocence;
 That crafty kind with daylight can dispense. Dryden.

If bodies be illuminated by the ordinary prismatic colours, they will appear neither of their own daylight colours, nor of the colour of the light cast on them, but of some middle colour between both. Newton's Opticks.

DAY-LILY. n. f. The same with ASPHODEL, which see.

DAYMAN. n. f. [day and man.] An old word for umpire. Chaucer.

Perhaps rather, surety.
 For what art thou,
 That mak'st thyself his dayman, to prolong
 The vengeance preft? Fairy Queen.

DAYSPRING. n. f. [day and spring.] The rise of the day; the dawn; the first appearance of light.

So all ere dayspring, under conscious night,
 Secret they finish'd, and in order set. Milton.
 The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure and sweet,

With dayspring born, here leave me to respire. Milton.

DAYSTAR. n. f. [day and star.] The morning star.

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wife,
 Of greatest blood and yet more good than great:
 I meant the daystar should not brighter rise,
 Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat.

Ben Jonson.
 Sunk though he be beneath the watry floor;
 So sinks the daystar in the ocean bed,
 And yet anon repairs his drooping head.

Milton.

DEA

DAYTIME. n. f. [day and time.] The time in which there is light, opposed to night.

In the daytime Fame sitteth in a watch-tower, and flieth most by night; she minglcth things done with things not done, and is a terror to great cities. Bacon.

My ants never brought out their corn but in the night when the moon did shine, and kept it under ground in the daytime. Addison.

DAYWORK. n. f. [day and work.] Work imposed by the day: day labour.

True labour in the vineyard of thy lord,
 Ere prime thou hast th' imposed daywork done. Fairfax.

TO DAZE. v. a. [daz, Saxon.] To overpower with light; to strike with too strong lustre; to hinder the act of seeing by too much light suddenly introduced.

They smote the glittering armies as they stand,
 With quivering beams, which daz'd the wond'ring eye. Fairfax.

Poor human kind, all daz'd in open day,
 Err after bliss, and blindly miss their way. Dryden.
DAZIED. adj. [rather dazied. See DAZE.] Besprinkled with daisies.

Let us
 Find out the prettiest dazied plot we can,
 And make him a grave. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

TO DAZZLE. v. a. [See DAZE.]

1. To overpower with light; to hinder the action of the sight by sudden lustre.

Fears use to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes than open them. Bacon.

How is it that some wits are interrupted;
 That now they dazzled are, now clearly see? Davies.

2. To strike or surprise with splendour.
 Those heavenly shapes
 Will dazzle now this earthly, with their blaze Insufferably bright. Milton.

The places that have either shining sentiments or manners, have no occasion for them: a dazzling expression rather damages them, and serves only to eclipse their beauty. Pope.

Ah, friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
 To raise the thought, or touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

TO DAZZLE. v. n. To be overpowered with light; to lose the power of sight.

Dazzle mine eyes? or do I see three suns?
 Come, boy, and go with me; thy fight is young, Shakespeare.

And you shall read, when mine begins to dazzle. Shakespeare.

An overlight maketh the eyes dazzle, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness. Bacon.

I dare not trust these eyes;
 They dance in mists, and dazzle with surprise. Dryden.

DEACON. n. f. [diaconus, Latin.]

1. One of the lowest of the three orders of the clergy.

Likewise must the deacons be grave. 2 Tim. iii. 8.

 All, all but truth, drops dead-born from the prefs.

Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.
 4. Imitating death; senseless; motionless.

At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep. Psalms.

Anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and backbone, we know is used for procuring dead sleeps. Bacon.

5. Unactive; motionless.
 The tin fold sometimes higher, and sometimes lower, according to the quick vent and abundance, or the dead sale and scarcity. Carow.

Nay, there's a time when ev'n the rolling year
 Seems to stand still: dead calms are in the ocean,
 When not a breath disturbs the drouy main. Lee.

They cannot bear the dead weight of unemployed time lying upon their hands, nor the uneasiness it is to do nothing at all. Locke.

6. Empty; vacant.
 This colour often carries the mind away; yea, it deceiveth the sense; and it seemeth to the eye a shorter distance of way, if it be all dead and continued, than if it have trees or buildings, or any other marks whereby the eye may divide it. Bacon.

Nought but a blank remains, and a dead void space.

A step of life, that promis'd such a race. Dryden.
 7. Useless; unprofitable.

The commodities of the kingdom they took, though they lay dead upon their hands for want of vent. Bacon.

Perfuade a prince that he is irresistible, and he will take care not to let so glorious an attribute lie dead and useless by him. Addison.

8. Dull; gloomy; unemployed.
 Travelling over Armanus, then covered with deep snow, they came in the dead Winter to Aleppo. Knolles.

There is something unspeakably cheerful in a spot of ground which is covered with trees, that smiles amidst all the rigours of Winter, and gives us a view of the most gay season in the midst of that which is the most dead and melancholy. Addison.

9. Still; obscure.
 Their flight was only deferred until they might cover their disorders by the dead darkness of the night. Hayward.

10. Having no resemblance of life.
 At a second sitting, though I alter not the draught, I must touch the same features over again, and change the dead colouring of the whole. Dryden.

11. Obtuse; dull; not sprightly. Used of sounds.

We took a bell of about two inches in diameter at the bottom, which was supported, in the midst of the cavity of the receiver, by a bent stick, in which, when it was closed up, the bell seemed to found more dead than it did when just before it sounded in the open air. Boyle.

12. Dull; frigid; not animated; not affecting.
 How cold and dead does a prayer appear, that is compos'd in the most elegant forms of speech, when it is not heightened by solemnity of phrase from the sacred writings. Addison.

13. Tasteless; vapid; spiritless: used of liquors.

14. Uninhabited.
 Somewhat is left under dead walls and dry ditches. Arbutnot.

17. [In theology.] The state of spiritual death, lying under the power of sin.

You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins. Ephes. ii. 1.

THE DEAD. n. f. Dead men.

Jove saw from high with just disdain,
 The dead inspir'd with vital life again. Dryden.

The

DEA

The ancient Romans generally buried their dead near the great roads.
That the dead shall rise and live again, is beyond the discovery of reason, and is purely a matter of faith.

The tow'ring bard had sung in nobler lays,
How the last trumpet wakes the lazy dead.

DEAD. n. f. Time in which there is remarkable stillness or gloom; as at midwinter and mid-night.

After this life, to hope for the favours of mercy then, is to expect an harvest in the dead of winter.

In the dead of the night, when the men and their dogs were all fast asleep.

At length, in dead of night, the ghost appears Of her unhappy lord.

To DEAD. v. n. [from the noun.] To lose force, of whatever kind.

Iron, as soon as it is out of the fire, deadeth straightways.

To DEAD. } v. a.
To DEADEN. }

1. To deprive of any kind of force or sensation.

That the found may be extinguished or deadened by discharging the pent air, before it cometh to the mouth of the piece, and to the open air, is not probable.

It is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxness of that membrane will certainly dead and damp the found.

This motion would be quickly deadened by counter-motions.

We will not oppose any thing to them that is hard and stubborn, but by a soft answer deadens their force by degrees.

Our dreams are great instances of that activity which is natural to the human soul, and which is not in the power of sleep to dead or abate.

Anodynes are such things as relax the tension of the affected nervous fibres, or destroy the particular acrimony which occasions the pain, or what deadens the sensation of the brain by procuring sleep.

2. To make vapid, or spiritless.
The beer and the wine, as well within water as above, have not been palled or deadened at all.

DEAD-DOING. participial adj. [dead and do.] Destructive; killing; mischievous; having the power to make dead.

Hold, O dear lord, your dead-doing hand;
Then loud he cry'd, I am your humble thrall.

They never care how many others
They kill, without regard of mothers,
Or wives or children, so they can Make up some fierce dead-doing man.

DEAD-LIFT. n. f. [dead and lift.] Hopeless exigence.

And have no power at all, nor shift,
To help itself at a dead-lift.

DEADLY. adj. [from dead.]

1. Destructive; mortal; murderous.
She then on Romeo calls, as if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her.

Dry mourning will decay more deadly bring,
As a North wind burns a too forward Spring;
Give sorrow vent, and let the sluices go.

2. Mortal; implacable.
The Numidians, in number infinite, are deadly enemies unto the Turks.

DEADLY. adv.

1. In a manner resembling the dead.

Like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale.

Young Arcite heard, and up he ran with haste,
And ask'd him why he look'd deadly wan?

DEADNESS. n. f. [from dead.]

1. Frigidity; want of warmth; want of ardour; want of affection.

His grace removes the defect of inclination, by taking off our natural deadness and disaffection towards them.

2. Weakness of the vital powers; languor; faintness; inactivity of the spirits.

Your gloomy eyes betray a deadness,
And inward languishing.

3. Vapidity of liquors; loss of spirit.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessels.

DEADNETTLE. n. f. A weed; the fame with archangel.

DEAD-RECKONING. n. f. [a sea term.] That estimation or conjecture which seamen make of the place where a ship is, by keeping an account of her way by the log, by knowing the course they have steered by the compass, and by rectifying all with allowance for drift or lee-way; so that this reckoning is without any observation of the sun, moon, and stars, and is to be rectified as often as any good observation can be had.

DEAF. adj. [deaf, Dutch.]

1. Wanting the sense of hearing.

Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.

The chief design here intended is to instruct such as are deaf and dumb, and dumb only by consequence of their want of hearing.

If any sins afflict our life,
With that prime ill, a talking wife,
'Till death shall bring the kind relief,
We must be patient, or be deaf.

Thus you may still be young to me,
While I can better hear than see:
Oh ne'er may fortune shew her spirit;
To make me deaf, and mend my sight.

2. It has to before the thing that ought to be heard.

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;
Nor tears, nor prayers shall purchase out abuses.

Oh, that men's ears should be
To counsel deaf, but not to flattery!

Whilst virtue courts them; but, alas, in vain:
Fly from her kind embracing arms,
Deaf to her fondest call, blind to her greatest charms.

Not so, for once indulg'd, they sweep the main;
Deaf to the call, or, hearing, hear in vain.

Hope, too long with vain delusion fed,
Deaf to the rumour of fallacious fame,
Gives to the roll of death his glorious name.

3. Deprived of the power of hearing.

Deaf with the noise, I took my hasty flight:
No mortal courage can support the fright.

4. Obscurely heard.

Nor silence is within, nor voice expresses,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
Confus'd and chiding like the hollow roar
Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore.

The rest were seiz'd with fullen discontent,
And a deaf murmur through the squadrons went.

To DEAF. v. a. To deprive of the power of hearing.

DEA

Hearing hath deaf'd our sailors; and if they know how to hear, there's none know what to say.

A swarm of their aerial shapes appears,
And, flutt'ring round his temples, deaf's his ears.

To DEAFEN. v. a. [from deaf.] To deprive of the power of hearing.

But Salus enters; and exclaiming loud
For justice, deafens and disturbs the crowd.

From shouting men, and horns, and dogs, he flies,
Deafen'd and stunn'd with their promiscuous cries.

DEAFLY. adv. [from deaf.]

1. Without sense of sounds.

2. Obscurely to the ear.

DEAFNESS. n. f. [from deaf.]

1. Want of the power of hearing; want of sense of sounds.

Those who are deaf and dumb, are dumb by consequence from their deafness.

The Dunciad had never been writ, but at his request, and for his deafness; for had he been able to converse with me, do you think I had amused my time so ill?

2. Unwillingness to hear

I found such a deafness, that no declaration from the bishops could take place.

DEAL. n. f. [deal, Dutch.]

1. Part.

A great deal of that which had been, was now to be removed out of the church.

2. Quantity; degree of more or less. It was formerly joined with different words, to limit its meaning; as, some deal, in some degree, to some amount: we now either say, a great deal, or a deal, without an adjective; but this is commonly, if not always, ludicrous, or contemptuous.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of error more earnest a great deal, than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintenance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth.

There is, indeed, store of matters, fitter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in.

To weep with them that weep, doth ease some deal;

But sorrow, flouted at, is double death.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tendering visits.

The charge, some deal thee haply honour may,
That noble Dudone had while here he liv'd.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, they have so much the more reason a great deal to doubt of it.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and sophistry, has puzzled and perplexed his cause.

3. [From the verb to deal.] The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can the muse her aid support,
Unskill'd in all the terms of art!

Or in harmonious numbers put
The deal, the shuffle, and the cut.

4. [dyl, Dutch.] Firewood; or the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being purposely inteposed betwixt my eye, placed in a room; and the clearer day light was not only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lovely red.

To DEAL. v. a. [dealen, Dutch.]

1. To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out, to thy house.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.

His

His lifted arms around his head he throws,
And deals, in whistling air, his empty blows.

The business of mankind in this life, being rather to act than to know, their portion of knowledge is dealt them accordingly.

How Spain prepares her banners to unfold,
And Rome deals out her blessings and her gold.

Had the great men of antiquity been possessed of the art of printing, they would have made an advantage of it, in dealing out their lectures to the publick.

If you deal out great quantities of strong liquor to the mob, there will be many drunk.

2. To scatter: to throw about.
Keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,

When hissing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt.

3. To give gradually, or one after another.
The nightly mallet deals refunding blows.

4. To distribute the cards.
To DEAL. v. n.

1. To traffick; to transact business; to trade.
It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by a man himself, than by the mediation of a third.

This is to drive a wholesome trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick.
With the fond maids in palmystry he deals,
They tell the secret first which he reveals.

2. To act between two persons; to intervene.
Sometimes he that deals between man and man, traffeth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either.

3. To behave well or ill in any transaction.
I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true.

4. To act in any manner.
Two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon.

5. To DEAL by. To treat well or ill. This seems a vicious use.
Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.
Suitors are so distastful with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable but also gracious.

The Scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they proposed to themselves.

Among authors, none draw upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in political matters.

True logick is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute, to which the former ages had debated it.

7. To DEAL with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.
Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with, to have that which is none of their own given to them.

Who then shall guide
His people? Who defend? Will they not deal
Worse with his followers, than with him they dealt?

If a man would have his conscience deal clearly with him, he must deal severely with that.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the deal.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who have been thus dealt with by their country.

8. To DEAL with. To contend with.
If he hated me, I should know what passion to deal with.

Gentlemen were commanded to remain in the country, to govern the people, easy to be dealt with whilst they it and in fear.

Then you upbraid me; I am pleas'd to see
You're not so perfect, but can fail like me:
I have no God to deal with.

To *DEAL*BATE. v. a. [dealbo, Lat.] To whiten; to bleach.

DEALBATION. n. f. [dealbatio, Latin.] The act of bleaching or whitening; rendering things white which were not so before: a word in little use.

All feed is white in viviparous animals, and such as have preparing vessels, wherein it receives a manifold dealbation.

DEALER. n. f. [from deal.]
1. One that has to do with any thing.
I find it common with these small dealers in wit and learning, to give themselves a title from their first adventure.

2. A trader or trafficker.
Where fraud is permitted and connived at, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage.

3. A person who deals the cards.
DEALING. n. f. [from deal.]
1. Practice; action.

Concerning the dealings of men, who administer government, and unto whom the execution of that law belongeth, they have their judge, who sitteth in heaven.

What these are!
Whose own hand dealings teach them to suspect
The thoughts of others.

But this was neither one pope's fault, nor one prince's destiny: he must write a story of the empire, that means to tell of all their dealings in this kind.

2. Intercourse.
It were to be wished, that men would promote the happiness of one another, in all their private dealings, among those who lie within their influence.

3. Measure of treatment; mode in which one treats another.
God's gracious dealings with men, are the aids and auxiliaries necessary to us in the pursuit of piety.

4. Traffick; business.
The doctor must needs die rich; he had great dealings in his way for many years.

DEAMBULATION. n. f. [deambulatio, Latin.] The act of walking abroad.

DEAMBULATORY. adj. [deambulo, Lat.] Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN. n. f. [decanus, Latin; dojen, French.] From the Greek word δῆνα; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbies, transformed from abbot or prior, and convent to dean and chapter) so there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his Comptrolleur to the chapter, the chapter then choosing and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to install them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patent, without either election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arch-bishop, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex.

The dean and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church; they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose.

DEANERY. n. f. [from dean.]
1. The office of a dean.
He could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal.

2. The revenue of a dean.
Put both deans in one; or, if that's too much trouble,
Instead of the deans make the deanery double.

3. The house of a dean.
Take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly.

DEANSHIP. n. f. [from dean.] The office and rank of a dean.

To feed on venison when it sold for dear.

3. Scarce; not plentiful; as, a dear year.
4. It seems to be sometimes used in Shakespeare for dear; sad; hateful; grievous.

What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,
Whom thou in terms so bloody, and so dear,
Hast made thine enemies? Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril.

Some dear cause
Will in concealment wrap me up a-while;
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
Lending me this acquaintance.

Would I had met my dearest foe in heav'n,
Or ever I had seen that day.

Thy other banish'd son, with his dear fight
Struck pale and bloodless.

DEAR. n. f. A word of endearment; darling.
That kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since.

Go, dear; each minute does new danger bring.

See, my dear,
How lavish nature has adorn'd the year.

DEARBOUGHT. adj. [dear and bought.] Purchased at an high price.

O fleeting joys
Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woe.

Such dear bought blessings happen ev'ry day,
Because we know not for what things to pray.

Forget not what my ransom cost,
Nor let my dear bought soul be lost.

DEARLING. n. f. [now written darling.] Favourite.

They do feed on nectar, heavenly wife,
With Hercules and Hebe, and the rest
Of Venus' darlings, through her bounty blest.

Landlords prohibit tenants from plowing, which is seen in the dearness of corn. Swift.

DE'ARNLY. adv. [deorn, Sax.] Secretly; privately; unseen. Obsolete.

At last, as chance'd them by a forest side
To pass, for succour from the scorching ray,
They heard a rueful voice, that dearly cry'd
With piercing shrieks. Spenser.

DEARTH. n. f. [from dear.]
1. Scarcity which makes food dear.
In times of dearth it drained much coin out of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon.

There have been terrible years dearths of corn, and every place is strewn with beggars; but dearths are common in better climates, and our evils here lie much deeper. Swift.

2. Want; need; famine.
Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time. Shakspeare.

Of every tree that in the garden grows,
Eat freely with glad heart; fear here no dearth.
Milton.

3. Barrenness; sterility.
The French have brought on themselves that dearth of plot, and narrowness of imagination, which may be observed in all their plays. Dryden.

To DEARTHULATE. n. f. [de and articulate, Latin.] To disjoint; to dismember. Dict.

DEATH. n. f. [deap, Saxon.]
1. The extinction of life; the departure of the soul from the body.

He is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. Hebrews, ix. 15.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers,
either in nativity or death. Shakespeare.

Death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

He must his acts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

in the midst of the seas. Ezekiel, xxviii. 8.

5. The image of mortality represented by a skeleton.

I had rather be married to a death's head, with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. Shakspeare.

If I gaze now, 'tis but to see
What manner of death's head 'twill be,
When it is free
From that fresh upper skin;
The gazer's joy, and sin. Suckling.

6. Murder; the act of destroying life unlawfully.

As in manifesting the sweet influence of his mercy, on the severe stroke of his justice; so in this, not to suffer a man of death to live. Bacon.

7. Cause of death.
They cried out, and said, O thou man of God,
there is death in the pot. 2 Kings, iv. 40.

He caught his death the last county-lessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman. Addison.

8. Destroyer.
All the endeavours Achilles used to meet with Hector, and be the death of him, is the intrigue which comprehends the battle of the last day.
Broome's View of Epic Poetry.

9. [In poetry.] The instrument of death.
Deaths invisible come wing'd with fire;
They hear a dreadful noise, and straight expire.
Dryden.

Sounded at once the bow; and swiftly flies
The feather'd death, and hisses through the skies.
Dryden.

Off, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clam'rous lapwings feel the leaden death.
Pope.

10. [In theology.] Damnation; eternal torments.

We pray that God will keep us from all sin and wickedness, from our ghostly enemy, and from everlasting death. Church Catechism.

DEATH-BED. n. f. [death and bed.] The bed to which a man is confined by mortal sickness.

Sweet soul, take heed, take heed of perjury;
Thou art on thy death-bed. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thy death-bed is no less than the land,
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick.
Shakespeare's Richard II.

These are such things as a man shall remember with joy upon his death-bed; such as shall cheer and warm his heart, even in that last and bitter agony. South's Sermons.

Then round her death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joy us of our conquest early won.
Dryden's Fables.

A death-bed figure is certainly the most humbling sight in the world. Collier on the Value of Life.

A death-bed repentance ought not indeed to be neglected, because it is the last thing that we can do. Atterbury.

Fame can never make us lie down contentedly on a death-bed. Pope.

DEATHFUL. adj. [death and full.] Full of slaughter; destruction; murderous

Your cruelty was such, you would spare his life for many deathful torments. Sidney.

Time itself, under the deathful shade of whose wings all things wither, hath vested that lively virtue of nature in man and beasts, and plants. Raleigh.

Blood, death, and deathful deeds are in that noise,
Ruin, destruction at the utmost point. Milton.

These eyes behold
The deathful scene; princes on princes roll'd.
Pope.

DEATHLESS. adj. [from death.] Immortal;
neverdying; everlasting.

God hath only immortality, though angels and human souls be deathless. Boyle.

Their temples wreath'd with leaves, that still renew;
For deathless laurel is the victor's due. Dryden.

Faith and hope themselves shall die,
While deathless charity remains. Prior.

DEATHLIKE. adj. [death and like.] Resembling death; still; gloomy; motionless; placid; calm; peaceful; undisturbed; resembling either the horrors or the quietness of death.

Why dost thou let thy brave soul lie supprest
In deathlike slumbers, while thy dangers crave
A waking eye and hand? Crafter.

A deathlike sleep!
A gentle wafting to immortal life! Milton.

On seas, on earth, and all that in them dwell,
A deathlike quiet and deep silence fell. Waller.

Black melancholy sits, and round her throws
A deathlike slumber, and a dread repose. Pope.

DEATH'S-DOOR. [death and door.] A near approach to death; the gates of death, whence death.
It is now a low phrase.

I myself knew a person of great sanctity, who was afflicted to death's-door with a vomiting.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
There was a poor young woman that had brought herself even to death's-door with grief for her sick husband. L'Estrange.

DEATHSMAN. n. f. [death and man.] Executioner; hangman; headman; he that executes
the sentence of death.

He's dead; I'm only sorry
He had no other deathsmen. Shakspeare.

As deathsmen you have rid this sweet young prince. Shakspeare.

DEATHWATCH. n. f. [death and watch.] An infect that makes a tinkling noise like that of a watch, and is superstitiously imagined to prognosticate death.

The solemn deathwatch click'd the hour the dy'd. Gay.

We learn to preface approaching death in a family by ravens, and little worms, which we therefore call a deathwatch. Watts.

Misers are muckworms, silkworms beaus,
And deathwatches physicians. Pope.

To DE'URATE. v. a. [deauris, Latin.] To gild, or cover with gold. Dict.

DEAURATION. n. f. [from deaurate, Lat.] The act of gilding.

DEBACCHATION. n. f. [debaccatio, Latin.] A raging; a madness. Dict.

To DEBAR. v. a. [from de and barba, Latin.]
To deprive of his beard. Dict.

To DEBARRE. v. a. [debarquer, Fr.] To dis-embark. Dict.

To DEBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To exclude;
to preclude; to shut out from anything; to hinder.

The same boats and the same buildings are found in countries debarred from all commerce by unpassable mountains, lakes and deserts.
Raleigh's Essays.

Nor so strictly hath our Lord impos'd
Labour, as to debar us when we need Refreshment, whether food, or talk between,
Food of the mind. Milton.

Civility, intended to make us easy, is employed in laying chains and fetters upon us, in debarring us of our wishes, and in crossing our most reasonable desires. Swift.

To DEBASE. v. a. [from base.]
1. To reduce from a higher to a lower state.

Homer intended to teach, that pleasure and sensuality debase men into beasts. Broome on the Ody.

As much as you raise silver, you debase gold;
for they are in the condition of two things, put in opposite scales; as much as the one rises, the other falls. Locke.

2. To make mean; to sink into meanness; to make despicable: to degrade.

It is a kind of taking God's name in vain, to debase religion with such frivolous disputes. Hooker.

A man of large possessions has not leisure to consider of every slight expence, and will not de- base himself to the management of every trifle. Dryden.

Restraining others, yet himself not free;
Made impotent by pow'r, debas'd by dignity. Dry.

3. To sink; to vitiate with meanness.
He ought to be careful of not letting his subject debase his style, and betray him into a meanness of expression. Addison.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to refuse those which favour the other, is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it. Locke.

4. To adulterate; to lessen in value by base ad-mixtures.

He reformed the coin, which was much adulterated and debas'd in the times and troubles of king Stephen. Hale.

Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on. Hudib.

DEBASEMENT. n. f. [from debase.] The act of debasing or degrading; degradation.

It is a wretched debasement of that sprightly faculty

DEB

culty, the tongue, thus to be made the interpreter to a goat or boar.

DEBATER. n. f. [from d. baf.] He that debates; he that adulterates; he that degrades another; he that sinks the value of things, or destroys the dignity of persons.

DEBATABLE. adj. [from debate.] Disputable; that which is, or may be, subject to controversy.

The French requested, that the debatable ground, and the Scottish hostages, might be restored to the Scots.

A DEBATE. n. f. [debate, French.]

1. A personal dispute; a controversy.

A way that men ordinarily use, to force others to submit to their judgments, and receive their opinion in d. bate, is to require the adversary to admit what they allege as a proof, or to assign a better.

It is to diffuse a light over the understanding, in our enquiries after truth, and not to furnish the tongue with d. bate and controversy.

2. A quarrel; a contest: it is not now used of hostile contest.

Now, lords, if heav'n doth give successful end To this d. bate that bleedeth at our doors, We will our youth lead on to higher fields, And draw no swords but what are sanctified.

'Tis thine to ruin realms, o'erturn a state; Betwixt the dearest friends to raise debate.

TO DEBATE. v. a. [debate, French.] To controvert; to dispute; to contest.

Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself, and discover not a secret to another.

He could not debate any thing without some commotion, even when the argument was not of moment.

TO DEBATE. v. n.

1. To deliberate.

Your sev'ral suits Have been consider'd and debated on.

2. To dispute.

He presents that great soul debating upon the subject of life and death and his intimate friends.

DEBATEFUL. adj. [from debate.]

1. [Of persons.] Quarrelsome; contentious.

2. [Of things.] Contested; occasioning quarrels.

DEBATEMENT. n. f. [from debate.] Controversy; deliberation.

Without debatement further, more or less, He should the hearers put to sudden death.

DEBATER. n. f. [from debate.] A disputant; a controvertist.

TO DEBAUCH. v. a. [debaucher, Fr. debauché, Latin.]

1. To corrupt; to vitiate.

A man must have got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin.

This it is to counsel things that are unjust; first, to debauch a king to break his laws, and then to seek protection.

2. To corrupt with lewdness.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires, Men so disorder'd, so d. bauch'd and bold,

That this our court, infected with their manners, Shews like a riotous inn.

3. To corrupt by intemperance.

No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is reasonable for him to debauch himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality.

DEBAUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fit of intemperance.

He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; 'till within a little while he recovers his former d. bauch, and is well again, and then his appetite returns.

2. Luxury; excess; lewdness.

The first physicians by debauch were made; Excess began, and sloth sustains the trade.

DEBAUCHÉ. n. f. [from debauché, French.] A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.

Could we but prevail with the greatest debauché

DEB

amongst us to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgments.

DEBAUCHER. n. f. [from debauch.] One who seduces others to intemperance or lewdness; a corrupter.

DEBAUCHERY. n. f. [from debauch.] The practice of excess; intemperance; lewdness.

Oppose vices by their contrary virtues, hypocritise by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance.

These magistrates, instead of lessening enormities, occasion just twice as much debauchery as there would be without them.

DEBAUCHMENT. n. f. [from debauch.] The act of debauching or vitiating; corruption.

They told them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens, or the debauchment of nations, or the extreme poverty of learned persons.

TO DEBE/L. v. a. [debell, Latin.] To

TO DEBELLATE. v. a. [debellare, Latin.] To conquer; to overcome in war: not now in use.

It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour.

Thou didst debell, and down from heaven cast With all his army.

DEBELLATION. n. f. [from debellatio, Latin.] The act of conquering in war.

DEBESTURE. n. f. [debestur, Latin, from debeo.] A writ or note, by which a debt is claimed.

You modern wits, should each man bring his claim,

Have desperate debestures on your fame; And little would be left you, I'm afraid, If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid.

DEBILE. adj. [debilis, Lat.] Weak; feeble; languid; faint; without strength; imbecile; impotent.

I have not wash'd my nose that bleed, Or foil'd some debile wretch, which without note There's many else have done.

TO DEBILITATE. v. a. [debilito, Latin.] To weaken; to make faint; to enfeeble; to emasculate.

In the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, they seemed as weakly to fail as their debilitated posterity ever after.

The spirits being rendered languid, are incapable of purifying the blood, and debilitated in attracting nutriment.

DEBILITATION. n. f. [from debilitatio, Lat.] The act of weakening.

The weakness cannot return any thing of strength, honour, or safety to the head, but a debilitation and ruin.

DEBILITY. n. f. [debilitas, Latin.] Weakness; feebleness; languor; faintness; imbecility.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion, And in thy case do glass mine own debility.

Aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to the inconveniencies of too strong a perspiration, which are debility, faintness, and sometime sudden death.

DEBONAIRE. adj. [debonaire, Fr.] Elegant; civil; well-bred; gentle; complaisant: an obsolete word.

Crying, let be that lady debonair, Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare To battle; if thou mean her love to gain.

Zephyr met her once a-maying, Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,

So bucksome, blithe, and debonair.

The nature of the one is debonair and accostable; of the other, retired and supercilious; the one quick and sprightly, the other slow and saturnine.

And she that was not only passing fair, But was withal discreet and debonair, Revolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil.

DEBONAIRELY. adv. [from debonair.] Elegantly; with a genteel air.

DEBT. n. f. [debitum, Latin; de te, French.]

1. That which one man owes to another, There was one that died greatly in debt: Well, says one, if he be gone, then he ha'h carried five hundred ducats of mine with him into the other world.

The debt of ten thousand talents, which the servant owed to the king, was no slight ordinary sum.

To this great loss a sea of tears is due; But the whole debt not to be paid by you.

Swift a thousand pounds in debt, Takes horse, and in a mighty fret Rides day and night.

2. That which any one is obliged to do or suffer. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;

He only liv'd but 'till he was a man. But like a man he died.

DEBTED. part. [from debt.] TO DEBT is now found.] Indebted; obliged to.

Which do amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand debted to this gentleman.

DEBTOR. n. f. [debitor, Latin.]

1. He that owes something to another. I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wife and to the unwife.

2. One that owes money. I'll bring your latter hazard back again, And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

If he his ample palm Should hap'ly on ill-fated shoulder lay Of debtor, strait his body, to the touch Obsequious, as whilom knights were wont,

To some enchanted castle is convey'd.

There dy'd my father, no man's debtor; And there I'll die, nor worse, nor better.

The case of debtors in Rome, for the first four centuries, was, after the set time for payment, no choice but either to pay, or be the creditor's slave.

3. One side of an account-book. When I look upon the debtor side, I find such innumerable articles, that I want arithmetick to cast them up; but when I look upon the creditor side, I find little more than blank paper.

DEBULLITION. n. f. [debullitio, Lat.] A bubbling or seething over.

DECAUMINATED. adj. [decauminatus, Latin.] Having the top cut off.

DECADE. n. f. [deka, Gr. decai, Latin.] The sum of ten; a number containing ten.

Men were not only out in the number of some days, the latitude of a few years, but might be wide by whole olympiads, and divers decades of years.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decades, centuries, and chiliads, chiefly for the use of computations in history, chronology, and astronomy.

All rank'd by ten; whole decades, when they dine,

Must want a Trojan slave to pour the wine.

DECADENCY. n. f. [decadence, French.] Decay; fall.

DECAGON. n. f. [from deka, ten, and gona, a corner.] A plain figure in geometry, having ten sides and angles.

behead.

To DECA'Y. v. n. [decbeor, Fr. from de and cadere, Latin.] To lose excellence; to decline from the state of perfection; to be gradually impaired.

The monarch oak
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.
The garlands fade, the vows are worn away;
So dies her love, and so my hopes decay. Pope.
To DECA'Y. v. a. To impair; to bring to decay.

Infirmary, that decays the wife, doth ever make better the fool. Shakespeare.

Cut off a stock of a tree, and lay that which you cut off to putrefy, to see whether it will decay
the rest of the stock. Bacon.

He was of a very small and decayed fortune, and of no good education. Clarendon.

Decay'd by time and wars, they only prove Their former beauty by your former love. Dryden.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryden.

It is so ordered, that almost every thing which corrupts the soul decays the body. Addison.

DECA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Decline from the state of perfection; state of depravation or diminution.

What comfort to this great decay may come,
Shall be applied. Shakespeare.

She has been a fine lady, and paints and hides
Her decays very well. Bon Jonson.

And those decays, to speak the naked truth,
Through the defects of age, were crimes of youth. Denham.

By reason of the tenacity of fluids, and attrition of their parts, and the weakness of elasticity in solids, motion is much more apt to be lost than got, and is always upon the decay. Newton.

Each may feel encreases and decays,
And see now clearer and now darker days. Pope.

Taught half by reason, half by mere decay,
To welcome death, and calmly pass away. Pope.

2. The effects of diminution; the marks of decay.

They think, that whatever is called old must have the decay of time upon it, and truth too were liable to mould and rottenness. Locke.

3. Declension from prosperity.

And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee, then thou shalt relieve him. Levit. xxv. 35.

I am the very man,
That, from the first of difference and decay,
Have follow'd your sad steps. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. The cause of decline.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the public: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon.

DECA'YER. n. f. [from decay.] That which causes decay.

Your water is a fore decayer of your whorson dead body. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DECEASE. n. f. [decessus, Latin.] Death; departure from life.

Lands are by human law, in some places, after the owner's decease, divided unto all his children:
in some, all descendeth to the eldest son. Hooker.

To DECEASE. v. n. [decedo, Latin.] To die; to depart from life.

He tells us Arthur is deceas'd to-night. Shakespeare.

You shall die
Twice now, where others, that mortality
In her fair arms holds, shall but once decease. Chapman.

His latest victories still thickest come,
As, near the centre, motion doth increase:

'Till he, press'd down by his own weighty name,

Did, like the vestal, under spoils debase. Dryden.

DECEIT. n. f. [deceptio, Latin.]

1. Fraud; a cheat; a fallacy; any practice by which falsehood is made to pass for truth.

My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit. Job, xxvii. 4.

2. Stratagem; artifice.

His demand Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love,

But from deceit, bred by necessity. Shakespeare.

3. [In law.] A subtle wily shift or devise; all manner of craft, subtilty, guile, fraud, wiliness, sightness, cunning, covin, collusion, practice, and offence, used to deceive another man by any means, which hath no other proper or particular name but offence. Cowell.

DECEITFUL. adj. [deceit and full.] Fraudulent; full of deceit.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful. Shakespeare.

The lovely young Lavinia once had friends,
And fortune smil'd, deceitful, on her birth. Thomson.

DECEITFULLY. adv. [from deceitful.] Fraudulently; with deceit.

Exercise of form may be deceitfully dispatched of course. Wotton.

DECEITFULNESS. n. f. [from deceitful.] The quality of being fraudulent; tendency to deceive.

The care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful. Mat. xiii. 22.

DECEIVABLE. adj. [from deceive.]

1. Subject to fraud; exposed to imposture.

Man was not only deceivable in his integrity, but the angels of light in all their clarity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

How would thou use me now, blind, and thereby

Deceivable, in most things as a child
Helpless? hence easily condemn'd and scorn'd,
And last neglected. Milton.

2. Subject to produce error; deceitful.

It is good to consider deformity, not as a sign, which is more deceivable, but as a cause which fel-dom faileth of the effect. Bacon.

He received nothing but fair promises, which proved deceivable. Hayward.

O overfalling trust
In mortal strength! and oh, what not in man Deceivable and vain? Milton.

DECEIVABLENESS. n. f. [from deceivable.] Li-ableness to be deceived, or to deceive.

He that has a great patron, has the advantage of his negligence and deceivableness. Government of the Tongue.

To DECEIVE. v. a. [decepio, Latin.]

1. To cause to mistake; to bring into error; to impose upon.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that there was a divine right of primogeniture to both estate and power. Locke.

2. To delude by stratagem.

3. To cut off from expectation, with of before the thing.

The Turkish general, deceived of his expectation, withdrew his fleet twelve miles off. Knolles.

I now believ'd
The happy day approach'd, nor are my hopes deceiv'd. Dryden.

4. To mock; to fail.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes,
But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats. Dryden.

5. To deprive by fraud or stealth.

Wine is to be forborne in consumptions, for that the spirits of the wine prey on the viscid juice of the body, intercommon with the spirits of the body, and so deceive and rob them of their nourishment. Bacon.

Plant fruit-trees in large borders, and set therein fine flowers, but thin and sparingly, lest they deceive the trees. Bacon.

DECEIVER. n. f. [from deceive.] One that leads another into error; a cheat.

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more;
Men were deceivers ever:

One foot in sea, and one on shore;
To one thing constant never. Shakespeare.

As for Perkin's dismissal out of France, they interpreted it not as if he were detected for a counterfeit deceiver. Bacon.

Those voices, actions, or gestures, which men have not by any compact agreed to make the instruments of conveying their thoughts one to another, are not the proper instruments of deceiving, so as to denominate the person using them a liar or deceiver. Saunders.

It is to be admired how any deceiver can be so weak to foretell things near at hand, when a very few months must of necessity discover the imposture. Swift.

Adieu the heart-expanding bowl,
And all the kind deceivers of the soul. Pope.

DECEMBER. n. f. [december, Latin.] The last month of the year; but named december, or the tenth month, when the year began in March.

Men are April when they woo, and December when they wed. Shakespeare's As you like it.

What should we speak of,
When we are old as you? When we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December. Shakespeare.

DECEMPEDAL. adj. [from decempedis, Latin.]
Ten feet in length. Dier.

DECEMPVIRATE. n. f. [decempvirs, Latin.] The dignity and office of the ten governors of Rome, who were appointed to rule the commonwealth instead of consuls. Their authority subsisted only two years. Any body of ten men.

DECE'NCE. n. f. [decence, French; deceit, DECE'NCY. } Latin.]

1. Propriety of form; proper formality: becoming ceremony: decency is seldom used.

Those thousand decencies, that daily flow
From all her words and actions. Milton.

In good works there may be goodness in the general; but decency and gracefulness can be only in the particulars in doing the good. Spratt.

Were the offices of religion stript of all the external decencies of worship, they would not make a due impression on the minds of those who assist at them. Asterbury.

She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
But never, never reach'd one generous thought:
Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,
Content to dwell in decencies for ever. Pope.

2. Suitableness to character; propriety.

And must I own, she said, my secret smart?
What with more decency were in silence kept. Dryden.

The consideration immediately subsequent to the being of a thing, is what agrees or disagrees with that thing; what is suitable or unsuitable to it: and from this springs the notion of decency or indecency, that which becomes or misbecomes.

Sentiments which raise laughter, can very fel-dom be admitted with any decency into an heroic poem. Addison.

3. Modest; not ribaldry; not obscenity.

Immodest words admit of no defence;
For want of decency is want of sense. Roscommon.

DECE'NNIAL. adj. [from decennium, Latin.] What continues for the space of ten years.

DECE'NNIAL. } adj. [decem and novem, Lat.]
DECE'NNIARY. } Relating to the number nineteen.

Meton, of old, in the time of the Peloponnesian war, constituted a decennial circle, or of nineteen years; the same which we now call the golden number. Holder.

Seven months are retrenched in this whole decennary progress of the epacts, to reduce the accounts of her motion and place to those of the sun.
Holder.

DE'CENT. adj. [decens, Latin.]

1. Becoming; fit; suitable.

Since there must be ornaments both in painting and poetry, if they are not necessary, they must at least be decent. Vol. I. N^o. 12. 3-1

least be decent; that is, in their due place, and but moderately used. Dryden.

2. Grave; not gaudy; not ostentatious.
Come, penfive nun, devout and pure,
Sober, stedfast, and demure,
All in a robe of darkest train
Flowing with majestick train,
And fable stole of Cyprus lawn
O'er the decent shoulders drawn. Milton.

3. Not wanton; not immodest.
DECENTLY. adv. [from decent.]

1. In a proper manner; with suitable behaviour; without meanness or ostentation.
They could not decently refuse assistance to a person who had banished those who had insulted their relation. Broom.

Ye mists and exhalations that now rise
From hill or streaming lake, dusky and grey,
In honour to the world's great Author, rise!
Whether to deck with clouds th' uncolour'd sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
Rising or falling still advance his praise. Milton.

2. To dress; to array.

Sweet ornament! that decks a thing divine.
Shakespeare.

Long may'st thou live to wail thy children's loss,
And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine. Shakespeare.

She sets to work millions of spinning worms,
That in their green shops weave the smoothhair'd silk, Milton.

3. To adorn; to embellish.

But direful deadly black, both leaf and bloom,
Fit to adorn the head, and deck the dreary tomb. Spenser.

Now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground,
A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.

The god shall to his vot'ries tell
Each conscious tear, each blushing grace,
That deck'd dear Eloisa's face. Prior.

DECK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The floor of a ship.

Her keel plows hell,
And deck knocks heaven. Ben Jonson.

We have also rais'd our second decks, and given more vent thereby to our ordinance, trying on our nether overloop. Raleigh.

If any, born and bred under deck, had no other information but what sense affords, he would be of opinion that a ship was as stable as a house. Glanville.

On high rais'd decks the haughty Belgians ride,
Beneath whose shade our humble frigates go. Dryd.

At sun-set to their ship they make return,
And snore secure on decks till rosy morn. Dryden's Iliad.

DECREMENT. n. f. [decrementum, Latin.] Decrease ; the state of growing less ; the quantity lost by decreasing.

Upon the tropick, and first descension from our our solstice, we are scarce sensible of declination; but declining farther, our decrement accelerates: we set apace, and in our last days precipitate into our graves.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Rocks, mountains, and the other elevations of the earth, suffer a continual decrement, and grow lower and lower.

Woodward.

DECREPIT. adj. [decrepitus, Latin.] Wasted and worn out with age; in the last stage of decay.

Decrepit miser! base, ignoble wretch! Shakesp.
Of mens lives in this decrepit age of the world, many exceed fourscore, and some an hundred years,

Raleigh.

This pope is decrepit, and the bell goeth for him: take order that there be chosen a pope of froth years.

Bacon.

Decrepit superstition, and such as had their nativity in times beyond all history, are fresh in the observation of many heads.

Brown's Vul. Errors.

And from the North to call

Decrepit Winter.

Milton.

Who this observes, may in no body find

Shakspeare.

Decrepit age, but never in his mind.

Propp'd on his staff, and flooping as he goes,

A painted mitre shades his furrow'd brows;

The god, in the decrepit form array'd,

The gardens enter'd, and the fruits survey'd.

Pope.

The charge of witchcraft inspires people with a malevolence towards those poor decrepit parts of our species, in whom human nature is defaced by infirmity and dotage.

Addison.

To DECREPITATE. v. a. [decrepo, Latin.]

To calcine salt till it has ceased to crackle in the fire.

So will it come to pass in a pot of salt, although decrepitated.

That for small errors they whole plays decry.

Dryden.

Those measures which are extolled by one half of the kingdom, are naturally decry'd by the other.

Addison.

They applied themselves to lessen their authority, decry'd them as hard and unnecessary re-

Rogers.

Quicks and impostors are still cautioning us to beware of counterfeits, and decry others cheats only

Swift.

DECU'MBENCE. n. f. [decumbo, Latin.] The DECU'MBENCY. n. f. [from decumbere, Latin.] The act of lying down; the posture of lying down.

This must come to pass, if we hold opinion

they lie not down, and enjoy no decumbence at all;

for station is properly no rest, but one kind of motion.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Not considering the ancient manner of decum-bency, he imputed this gesture of the beloved disciple into rusticity, or an act of incivility.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DECU'MBATURE. n. f. [from decumbo, Lat.]

1. The time at which a man takes to his bed in a disease.

2. [In astrology.] A scheme of the heavens erected for that time, by which the prognosticks of recovery or death are discovered.

If but a mile the travel out of town,

The planetary hour must first be known,

And lucky moment: if her eye but akes,

Or itches, its decumbiture she takes.

Dryden.

DECU'PLE. adj. [decuplus, Latin.] Tenfold;

the same number ten times repeated.

Man's length, that is, a perpendicular from the vertex unto the sole of the foot, is decuple unto his profundity; that is a direct line between the breast and the spine.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Supposing there be a thousand sorts of insects in this island, if the same proportion holds between the insects of England and of the world as between plants domestick and exotick, that is, near a decu-ple, the species of insect will amount to ten thousand.

Ray.

From fasting maids, whose names are dedicate

To nothing temporal.

Shakspeare.

This tenth part, or tithe, being thus assigned unto him, leaveth now to be of the nature of the other nine parts, which are given us for our worldly necessities, and becometh as a thing dedicate and appropriate unto God.

Spelman.

DEDICATION. n. f. [dedicatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dedicating to any being or purpose; consecration; solemn appropriation.

It cannot be laid to many men's charge, that they have been so curious as to trouble bishops with placing the first stone in the churches; or so scrupulous as, after the erection of them, to make any great ado for their dedication.

Hooker.

Among publick solemnities there is none so glorious as that under the reign of king Solomon, at the dedication of the temple.

Addison.

2. An address to a patron.

Proud as Apollo on his forked hill,

Sat full blown Bufo, puff'd by ev'ry quill;

Fed by soft dedication all day long,

Horace and he went hand in hand in song.

Pope.

DEDICATOR. n. f. [from dedicate.] One who inscribes his work to a patron with compliment and fertility.

Leave dang'rous truths to unsuccessful satyrs,

And flattery to fulsome dedicators.

Pope.

DEDICATORY. adj. [from dedicate.] Composing a dedication; complimentary; adulatory.

Thus I should begin my epistle, if it were a dedicatory one; but it is a friendly letter.

Pope.

DEDITION. n. f. [deditio, Latin.] The act of yielding up any thing; surrender.

It was not a complete conquest, but rather a dedition upon terms and capitulations agreed between the conqueror and the conquered.

Hale.

To DEDUCE. v. a. [deduco, Lat.]

1. To draw in a regular connected series,

DEDUCTION. n. f. [from deduco.] The thing deducted; the collection of reason; consequential proposition.

Praise and prayer are his due worship, and the rest of those deductions, which I am confident are the remotest effects of revelation. Dryden.

DEDUCTIVE. adj. [from deduco.] Collectible by reason; consequential; discoverable from principles laid down.

The condition, although deducible from many grounds, yet shall we evidence it but from few.

The general character of the new earth is paradoxical, and the particular character that it hath no fear; and both are apparently deducible from its formation. Barnes.

So far, therefore, as conscience reports any thing agreeable to, or deducible from these, it is to be hearkened to. South.

All properties of a triangle depend on, and are deducible from the complex idea of three lines, including a space. Locke.

DEDUCTIVE. adj. [from deduco.] Performing the act of deduction. Dict.

TO DEDUCT. v. a. [deduco, Latin.]

We deduct from the computation of our years, that part of our time which is spent in incogitancy of infancy. Norris.

2. To separate; to dispart; to divide. Now not in use.

Having yet, in his deducted fright,
Some sparks remaining of that heavenly fire. Spenser.

DEDUCTION. n. f. [deductio, Latin.]

1. Consequential collection; consequence; proposition drawn from principles premised.

Out of scripture such duties may be deduced, by some kind of consequence, as by long circuit of deduction it may be that even all truth, out of any truth, may be concluded. Hooker.

Set before you the moral law of God, with such deductions from it as our Saviour hath drawn, or our own reason, well informed, can make. Duppa.

That by diversity of motions we should spell out things not resembled by them, we must attribute to some secret deduction; but what this deduction should be, or by what mediums this knowledge is advanced, is as dark as ignorance. Rowville.

You have laid the experiments together in such a way, and made such deductions from them, as I have not hitherto met with. Boyle.

All crofs and distasteful humours are either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Testament. Tillotson.

A reflection so obvious, that natural instinct seems to have suggested it even to those who never much attended to deductions of reason. Rogers.

2. That which is deducted; defalcation.

Bring then these blessings to a strict account; Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope.

DEDUCTIVE. adj. [from deduct.] Deducible; that which is or may be deduced from a position premised.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects. Glazewille.

DEDUCTIVELY. adv. [from deductive.] Consequentially; by regular deduction; by a regular train of ratiocination.

There is hence a popular error passant in our days, which is not either directly expressed, or deductively contained in this work. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEED. n. f. [æet, Saxon; daed, Dutch.]

1. Action, whether good or bad; thing done. From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,

The place is dignified by the doers deed. Shakspeare.

The monster nought reply'd; for words were vain,

And deeds could only deeds unjust maintain. Dryden.

The same had not consented the council and deed. Locke.

We are not secluded from the expectation of reward for our charitable deeds. Smalbridge's Sermon.

2. Exploit; performance.

1, on the other side,
Us'd no ambition to commend my deeds;
The deeds themselves, tho' mute, spoke loud the doer. Milton.

Thousands were there in darker fame that dwell,
Whose deeds some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryden.

3. Power of action; agency.

Nor knew I not
To be with will and deed created free. Milton.

4. Act declamatory of an opinion.

They desire, with strange absurdity, that to the same senate it should belong to give full judgment in matter of excommunication, and to absolve whom it pleased them, clean contrary to their own former deeds and oaths. Hooker.

5. Written evidence of any legal act.

The solicitor gave an evidence for a deed, which was impeached to be fraudulent, Bacon.

He builds his house upon the sand, and writes the deeds, by which he holds his estate, upon the face of a river. South.

6. Fact; reality; contrary to fiction: whence the word indeed.

O that, as oft I have at Athens seen;
The stage arise, and the big clouds descend;
So now in very deed I might behold
The pond'rous earth, and all yon marble roof Meet like the hands of Jove. Lee's Oedipus.

DEEDLESS. adj. [from deed.] Unactive; without action; without exploits.

Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue. Shakspeare.

Instant, he cry'd, your female discord end,
Ye deedless boasters! and the song attend. Pope.

TO DEEM. v. n. part. deem't, or deem'd, [deem, Gothic; doemen, Dutch; teman, Saxon.]

1. To judge; to conclude upon consideration; to think; to opine; to determine.

Here eke that famous golden apple grew,
For which th' Idean ladies disagreed,
'Till partial Paris deem't it Venus' due. Spenser.

So natural is the union of religion with justice, that we may boldly deem there is neither, where both are not. Hooker.

He who, to be deem'd
A god, leapt fondly into Ætna flames. Milton.

These blessings, friend, a deity bestow'd;

For never can I deem him less than god. Dryden.

Nature disturb'd,
Is deem'd vindictive to have chang'd her course. Thomson.

2. To estimate; to make estimate of: this sense is now disused.

Do me not to dy,
Ne deem thy force by fortune's doom unjust,
That hath, maugre her spite, thus low me laid in dust. Spenser.

But they that skill not of so heavenly matter,
All that they know not, envy or admire,
Rather than envy, let them wonder at her,
But not to deem of her desert aspire. Spenser.

DEEM. n. f. [from the verb.] Judgment; surmise; opinion. Not now in use.

Hear me, my love, be thou but true of heart.
—I true! how now? what wicked deem is this? Shakspeare.

DEEMSTER. n. f. [from deem.] A judge; a word yet in use in Jersey and the Isle of Man.

DEEP. adj. [deep, Saxon.]

1. Having length downwards; descending far; profound; opposed to shallow.

All trees in high and sandy grounds are to be set deep, and in watry grounds more shallow. Bacon.

The gaping gulph low to the centre lies,
And twice as deep as earth is distant from the skies. Dryden.

2. Low in situation; not high.

3. Measured from the surface downward.

Mr. Halley, in diving deep into the sea in a diving vessel, found, in a clear sun-shine day, that when he was sunk many fathoms deep into the water, the upper part of his hand, on which the sun shone directly, appeared of a red colour. Newton.

4. Entering far; piercing a great way.
This avarice
Strikes deeper; grows with more pernicious root. Shakspeare.

For, even in that season of the year, the ways in that vale were very deep. Clarendon.

Thou hast not strength such labours to sustain:
Drink hellebore, my boy! drink deep, and scour thy brain. Dryden.

5. Far from the outer part.
So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie. Dryden.

6. Not superficial; not obvious.
If the matter be knotty, and the sense lies deep,
the mind must stop and buckle to it, and tick upon it with labour and thought, and close contemplation. Locke.

7. Sagacious; penetrating; having the power to enter far into a subject.

Who hath not heard it spoken
How deep you were within the books of heav'n. Shakspeare.

The spirit of deep prophecy he hath. Shakspeare.

He's meditating with two deep divines. Shakspeare.

He in my ear
Vented much policy and projects deep
Of enemies, of aids, battles and leagues,
Plausible to the world, to me worth naught. Milton.

I do not discover the helps which this great man of deep thought mentions. Locke.

8. Full of contrivance; politic; insidious.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me. Shakspeare's Richard III.

9. Grave; solemn.

O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakspeare's Richard III.

Nor awful Phœbus was on Pindus heard,
With deeper silence, or with more regard. Dryden.

10. Dark coloured.

With deeper brown the grove was overspread. Dryden.

11. Having a great degree of filiness, or gloom, or sadness.

And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall

The city of Rome would receive a great advantage from the undertaking, as it would raise the banks, and deepen the bed of the Tiber. Addison.

2. To darken; to cloud; to make dark.

DEF

You must deepen your colours so, that the ornament may be the highest. Peacbam.

3. To make sad or gloomy. See DEEP. adj.

Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green,
Deepens the murmurs of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

DEEP-MOUTHED, adj. [deep and mouth.] Having a hoarse and loud voice.

Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakespeare.

Behold the English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys, Whose shouts and claps outvoice that deep-mouth'd
sea. Shakespeare.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround. Dryden.

Hills, dales, and forests far behind remain,
While the warm scent draws on the deep-mouth'd train. Gay.

DEEP-MUSING, adj. [deep and mus.] Contemplative; lost in thought.

But the deep-musing o'er the mountains stray'd
Through mazy thickets of the woodland shade. Pope.

DEEPLY, adv. [from deep.]

1. To a great depth; far below the surface.
Fear is a passion that is most deeply rooted in our nature, and flows immediately from the principle of self preservation. Tillotson.

Those impressions were made when the brain was more susceptible of them: they have been deeply engraven at the proper season, and therefore they remain. Watts.

2. With great study or sagacity; not superficially; not carelessly; profoundly.

3. Sorrowfully; solemnly; with a great degree of seriousness or sadness.

make some other more gustful. Decay of Piety.

DEFAMATION, n. f. [from defame.] The act of defaming or bringing infamy upon another;

calumny; reproach; censure; detraction.

Defamation is the uttering of contumelious language of any one, with an intent of raising an ill fame of the party, and this extends to writing, as

by defamatory libels; and to deeds, as reproachful postures, signs and gestures. Ayliffe.

Be silent, and beware, if such you see;

'Tis defamation but to say, that's he. Dryden.

Many dark and intricate motives there are to detraction and defamation, and many malicious spies are searching into the actions of a great man. Addison.

DEFA'MATORY, adj. [from defame.] Calumnious;

tending to defame, unjustly censorious; libellous;

falsely satirical.

The most eminent sin is the spreading of defamatory reports. Government of the Tongue.

We ours for change delectable, not need. Milton.
He brought thee into this delicious grove,
This garden; planted with the trees or God;
Delectable, both to behold and taste! Milton.
Some of his attributes, and the manifestations thereof, are not only highly delectable to the in-tellective faculty, but are suitably and easily con-ceptible by us, because apparent in his works:
as his goodness, beneficence, wisdom and power.

Hale.

The apple's outward form,
Delectable, the witless swain beguiles;
'Till that with writhen mouth, and spattering noise,

Philips.

He tastes the bitter morsel.

1. To send away.
2. To send upon an embassy.
3. To intrust; to commit to another's power and jurisdiction.

As God hath imprinted his authority in several parts upon several estates of men, as princes, parents, spiritual guides; so he hath also delegated and committed part of his care and providence unto them.

Taylor.

As God is the universal monarch, so we have all the relation of fellow-subjects to him; and can pretend no farther jurisdiction over each other, than what he has delegat'd us.

Decay of Piety.

Why does he wake the correspondent moon,
And fill her living lamp with liquid light,
Commanding her, with delegat'd pow'rs,
To beautify the world, and bless the night?

Prior.

Most Grave-belly was deliberate,
Not rash, like his accusers. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. Slow; tedious; not sudden; gradual.

Commonly it is for virtuous considerations, that wisdom so far prevaileth with men as to make them desirous of flow and deliberate death, against the stream of their sensual inclination.

Hooker.

Echoes are some more sudden, and chop again as soon as the voice is delivered; others are more deliberate, that is, give more space between the voice and the echo, which is caused by the local nearness or distance.

Bacon.

DELI'BERATELY. adv. [from deliberate.]

1. Circumspectly; advisedly; warily.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies; knows better than any man what is not to be written;
and never hazards himself so far as to fall: but plods on deliberately, and, as a grave man ought,
is sure to put his staff before him.

Dryden.

2. Slowly; gradually.

DELI'BERATENESS. n. f. [from deliberate.] Cir-

Such a light and metall'd dance

Saw you never yet in France;

And by leadmen, for the nonce,

That turn round like grindle-stones,

Which they dig out fro' the delves,

For their bairns bread, wives, and selves. Ben Jonson.

A DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit. Ditz.

DELVER. n. f. [from delve.] A digger; one that opens the ground with a spade.

DELUGE. n. f. [deluge, French, from diluvium,

Latin.]

1. A general inundation; laying entirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration. Burnet's Theory.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they strive to force

His channel to a new or narrow course,

No longer then within his banks he dwells,

First to a torrent, then a deluge swells. Denham.

3. Any sudden and resistless calamity.

To DELUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The restless flood the land would overflow,

By which the delug'd earth would useless grow. Blackmore.

Still the battering waves rush in Implacable, till delug'd by the foam

The ship sinks, found'ring in the vast abyss. Philips.

2. To

DEM

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

DELUSIVE adj. [from delusus, Lat.] Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair, Delusive fights and brittle vows we bear. Prior.

The happy whimsey you pursue, 'Till you at length believe it true;

Caught by your own delusive art, You fancy first, and then assert. Prior.

While the base and groveling multitude were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest. Tatler, N^o. 81.

Phenomena so delusive, that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake. Woodward.

DELUSORY adj. [from delusus, Latin.] Apt to deceive.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a delusory prejudice. Glanville.

DEMAGOGUE n. f. [δημαγωγος, Gr.] A ringleader of the rabble; a populous and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to fend for them, to flatter and embolden them. King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon. South.

Demosthenes and Cicero, though each of them a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice. Swift.

DEMAIN. } n. f. [domaine, French.]
DEMAIN. }
DEMAINE. }

1. That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians, and opposed to fodum, or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders. Philips.

2. Estate in land.

Having now provided A gentleman of noble parentage, Of fair demies, youthful, and nobly allied. Shakespeare.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and feigniority, though the lands of that county in demies were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Darwin.

3. Land adjoining to the mansion, kept in the lord's own hand.

Those acts for planting forest-trees have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demies of a few gentlemen; and even there, in general, very unskillfully made. Swift.

To DEMAND v. a. [demand, French.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.

The pound of flesh, which I demand of him, Is dearly bought, 'tis mine, and I will have it. Shakespeare.

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered? 2 Sam. xi. 7.

If any friend of Cæsar's demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakespeare.

DEM

Young one,

Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems, They crave to be demanded. Shakespeare.

The oracle of Apollo being demanded, when the war and misery of Greece shall have an end, reply'd, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubic form. Peachment on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMAND n. f. [demande, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging: the asking of any thing with authority.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones. Daniel, iv. 14.

Giving vent, gives life and strength to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them. Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.

3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookseller tells me, the demand for those my papers increases daily.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every precept, there is express demand: in law, as every entry in land-distress for rent, taking or feising of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law. Blount.

DEMANDABLE adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All fums demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

DEMANDANT n. f. [from demand.]

1. He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands. Coke.

2. A plaintiff; one that demands redress.

One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted. Spectator.

DEMANDER n. f. [demandeur, French.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.

2. One that asks a question.

3. One that asks for a thing in order to purchase it.

4. A dinner; one that demands a debt.

DEMAIN. n. f. [from demenier, French.] A mien; pretence; carriage; demeanour; deportment.

At his feet, with sorrowful demean, And deadly hue, an armed corse did lie. Spenser.

To DEMEAN v. a. [from demenier, French.]

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately. South.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demeans himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever. Tillotson.

Strephon had long perplex'd his brains, How with so high a nymph he might Demean himself the wedding-night. Swift.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue.

Now, out of doubt, Antipolis is mad; Else he would never so demean himself. Shakespeare.

DEMEANOUR. n. f. [demenier, French.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain. Sidney.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour. Hooker.

DEM

His gestures fierce

He mark'd, and mad demeanour, then alone As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen. Milton.

Thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek,

Ill worthy I. Milton.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at Rhée, both at the landing, and upon the retreat. Clarendon.

Shakespeare's Othello

DEMI-GOD. n. f. [de mi and god.] Partaking of divine nature: half a god; an hero produced by the cohabitation of divinities with mortals.

He took his leave of them, whose eyes bade him farewell with tears, making temples to him as to a de mi-god.

Be gods or angels de mi-gods.

Transported de mi-gods flood round,

And men grew heroes at the found,

Enflam'd with glory's charms.

Nay half in heaven, except (what's mighty odd)

A fit of vapours clouds this de mi-god.

DEMI-LANCE. n. f. [de mi and lance.] A light lance; a short spear; a half-pike.

On their steel'd heads their de mi-lances were Small pennons which their ladies colours bore.

Dryden.

Light de mi-lances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs to gall the foe.

Dryden.

DEMI-MAN. n. f. [de mi and man.] Half a man.
A term of reproach.

son of sovereign authority.

L'Estrange.

To DEMI'T. v. a. [demitto, Lat.] To depress;
to hang down; to let fall.

When they are in their pride, that is, advancing their train, if they decline their neck to the ground, they presently demit, and let fall the same.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEMOCRACY. n. f. [δημοκρατία, Gr.] One of the three forms of government; that in which the sovereign power is neither lodged in one man, nor in the nobles, but in the collective body of the people.

While many of the servants, by industry and virtue, arrive at riches and esteem, then the nature of the government inclines to a democracy.

Temple.

The majority having the whole power of the community, may employ all that power in making laws; and executing those laws; and there the form of the government is a perfect democracy.

Locke.

DEMOCRATICAL. adj. [from democracy.] Pertaining to a popular government; popular.

They are still within the line of vulgarity, and are democratical enemies to truth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

As the government of England has a mixture of democratical in it, so the right is partly in the people.

Arbutnot.

To DEMO'LISH. v. a. [demolir, Fr. demolir, Lat.]
To throw down buildings; to raze; to destroy.

I expected the fabrick of my book would long since have been demolished, and laid even with the ground.

Tillotson.

Red lightning play'd along the firmament,
And their demolish'd works to pieces rent.

Dryden.

DEMO'LISHER. n. f. [from demolish.] One that throws down buildings; a destroyer; a layer waste.

DEMOLITION. n. f. [from demolish.] The act of overthrowing or demolishing buildings; destruction.

Two gentlemen should have the direction in the demolition of Dunkirk.

Swift.

DE'MON. n. f. [demon, Lat. daemōn.] A spirit;
generally an evil spirit; a devil.

I felt him strike, and now I see him fly:
Curs'd demon! O for ever broken lie

Those fatal shafts, by which I inward bleed!

Prior.

DEMON'ACAL. } adj. [from demon.]
DEMON'ACK. }

1. Belonging to the devil; devilish.
He, all unarm'd,

Shall chafe thee with the terror of his voice
From thy demoniac holds, possession foul.

Milton.

2. Influenced by the devil; produced by diabolical possession.

Demoniac phrensy, moping melancholy.

Milton.

DEMON'ACK. n. f. [from the adjective.] One possessed by the devil; one whose mind is disturbed and agitated by the power of wicked and unclean spirits.

Those lunatics and demoniacs that were restored to their right mind, were such as fought after him, and believed in him.

Bentley.

DEMON'IAN. adj. [from demon.] Devilish; of the nature of devils.

Demoniac spirits now, from the element
Each of his reign allotted, rightlier called Powers of fire, air, water.

Milton.

course of the nature of devils. Thus king James entitled his book concerning witches.

DEMON'STRABLE. adj. [demonstrabilis, Latin.]
That which may be proved beyond doubt or contradiction; that which may be made not only probable but evident.

The grand articles of our belief are as demonstra-
ble as geometry.

Glennville.

DEMON'STRABLY. adv. [from demonstrable.] In such a manner as admits of certain proof; evidently; beyond possibility of contradiction.

He should have compelled his ministers to execute the law, in cases that demonstrably concerned the public peace.

Clarendon.

To DEMONSTRATE. v. a. [demonstro, Latin.]
To prove with the highest degree of certainty; to prove in such a manner as reduces the contrary position to evident absurdity.

We cannot demonstrate these things so, as to shew that the contrary often involves a contradiction.

Tillotson.

DEMONSTRATION. n. f. [demonstratio, Latin.]
1. The highest degree of deducible or argumental evidence; the strongest degree of proof; such proof as not only evinces the position proved to be true, but shews the contrary position be absurd and impossible.

What appeareth to be true by strong and invincible demonstration, such as wherein it is not by any possible to be deceived, thereunto the mind doth necessarily yield.

Hooker.

Where the agreement or disagreement of any thing is plainly and clearly perceived, it is called demonstration.

Locke.

2. Indubitable evidence of the senses or reason.
Which way soever we turn ourselves, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible de- monstrations of a Deity.

Tillotson.

DEMONSTRATIVE. adj. [demonstrativus, Latin.]
1. Having the power of demonstration; invincibly conclusive; certain.

An argument necessary and demonstrative, is such as, being proposed unto any man, and understood, the man cannot choose but inwardly yield.

Hooker.

2. Having the power of expressing clearly and certainly.

Printing is necessary to all other arts, because of the need which they have of demonstrative figures, which often give more light to the understanding than the clearest discourses.

Dryden.

DEMONSTRATIVELY. adv. [from demonstra- tive.]

1. With evidence not to be opposed or doubted.

No man, in matters of this life, requires an assurance either of the good which he designs, or of the evil which he avoids, from arguments demon- stratively certain.

South.

First, I demonstratively prove,
That feet were only made to move.

Prior.

2. Clearly; plainly; with certain knowledge.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, it was not in the power of earth to work them from it.

Brown.

DEMONSTRATOR. n. f. [from demonstrare.]
One that proves; one that teaches; one that demonstrates.

DEMONSTRATORY. adj. [from demonstrare.]
Having the tendency to demonstrate.

DEMU'CENT. adj. [demulcent, Lat.] Softening; mollifying; assuasive.

Pease, being deprived of any aromatic parts, are mild and demulcent in the highest degree; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion.

Arbutnot.

To DEMU'R. v. n. [demeurer, French; demor- are, Italian; demorari, Latin.]

1. To delay a process in law by doubts and objections. See DEMURRER.

To this plea the plaintiff demurred. Walt. Angl.

2. To pause in uncertainty; to suspend in determination; to hesitate; to delay the conclusion of an affair.

Upon this rub the English ambassadors thought fit to demur, and so sent into England to receive directions from the lords of the council.

Hayward.

Running into demands, they expect from us a sudden resolution in things wherein the devil of Delphos would demur.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He must be of a very sluggish or querulous humour, that shall demur upon setting out, or demand higher encouragements than the hope of heaven.

Decay of Piety.

News of my death from rumour he receiv'd,
And what he wish'd, he easily believ'd;
But long demur'd, though from my hand he knew
I liv'd, so loth he was to think it true.

Dryden.

3. To doubt; to have scruples or difficulties;
to deliberate.

There is something in our composition, that thinks and apprehends, and reflects and deliberates, determines and doubts, consents and denies;
that wills and demurs, and resolves and chuses, and rejects.

Bentley.

To DEMU'R. v. a. To doubt of.

The latter I demur; for in their looks Much reason, and in their actions, oft appears.

Milton.

DEMU'R. n. f. [from the verb.] Doubt; hesitation; suspense of opinion.

O progeny of Heav'n, empyreal thrones!
With reason hath deep silence and demur.

Milton.

Seiz'd us, though undismay'd.

Certainly the highest and dearest concerns of a temporal life are infinitely less valuable than those of an eternal; and consequently ought, without any demur at all, to be sacrific'd to them, when-soever they come in competition with them.

South.

All my demurs but double his attacks;
At last he whispers, Do, and we go stacks.

Pope.

DEMU'RE. adj. [desmours, French.]

1. Sober; decent.

Lo! two most lovely virgins came in place,
With countenance demure, and modest grace.

Spenser.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,
Sober, steadfast and demure.

Milton.

2. Grave; affectedly modest: it is now generally taken in a sense of contempt.

After a demure travel of regard, I tell them I know my place, as I would they should do theirs.

Shakespeare.

There be many wise men, that have secret hearts and transparent countenances; yet this

Vol. I. N^o. 12. 3 L would would be done with a demure abasing of your eye sometimes.

A cat lay and looked so demure as if there had been neither life nor soul in her.

So cat, transform'd, fat gravely and demure, 'Till mouse appear'd, and thought himself secure.

Love sent and found, far in a country scene, Truth, innocence, good-nature, look serene;

From which ingredients, first, the dextrous boy Pick'd the demure, the awkward, and the coy.

To DEMURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To look with an affected modesty: not used.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes, And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour, Demure upon me.

DEMURELY. adv. [from demure.] 1. With affected modesty; solemnly; with pretended gravity.

Put on a sober habit, Talk with respect, and swear but now and then, Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely.

Esop's damsel, turned from a cat to a woman, fat very demurely at the board's end, till a mouse ran before her.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer, Soft smiling, and demurely looking down;

But hid the dagger underneath the gown.

2. In the following line it is the same with solemnly.

Hark, how the drums demurely wake the sleepers.

DEMURENESS. n. f. [from demure.] 1. Modesty; soberness; gravity of aspect.

Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor soul apt to believe.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

DEMURRAGE. n. f. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEMURRER. n. f. [from demur, Fr. i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.] A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action; for in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt.

I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge, with his associates, proceeds to judgment without further work.

But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is there stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chancery-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the serjeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy.

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer.

DEN. n. f. [den, Saxon.] 1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, dens and caves under the earth.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What, shall they seek the lion in his den, And fright him there?

The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame, Was now th' apartment of the royal dame;

The cavern only, to her father known, By him was to his darling daughter shown.

'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forlakes; In woods and fields a wild destruction makes.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both.

DENAL. n. f. [a word formed between den and nay.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel: say My love can give no place, hide no denay.

DENDROLOGY. n. f. [from dendron and logos.] The natural history of trees.

DENIABLE. adj. [from deny.] That which may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason.

DENIAL. n. f. [from deny.] 1. Negation; contrary to affirmation.

2. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler.

3. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or confession.

Here comes your father; never make denial: I must and will have Catharine to my wife.

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much.

He, at ev'ry fresh attempt, is repell'd With faint denials, weaker than before.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him.

DENIER. n. f. [from deny.] 1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God.

2. A disownor; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction!

3. A refuser; one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier: sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince.

DENIER. n. f. [from denarius, Lat. It is pronounced as deneer, in two syllables.] A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a fous.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst? — No, not a denier.

To DENIGRATE. v. a. [from denigro, Latin.] To blacken; to make black.

By suffering some impression from fire, bodies are casually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own suffitus.

Hartshorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat; yet camphire would not at all lose its whiteness.

DENIGRATION. n. f. [from denigro, Latin.] A blackening, or making black.

These are the adventitious and artificial ways of denigration, answerably whereto may be the natural progress.

In several instances of denigration the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts.

DENIZATION. n. f. [from denizen.] The act of enfranchising, or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens appears by the charters of denization, which in fall ages were purchased by them.

DENIZEN. n. f. [from dinasiddyn, a man of DEWELSON.] The city, or dinasydd, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one enfranchised.

DEN

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained.

Thus th' Almighty Sire began: ye gods, Natives, or denizens of blest abodes,

From whence these murmurs?

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their feed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to feed as a free denison of the world.

He summons straight his denizens of air; The lucid squadrons to the sails repair.

To DENIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchise; to make free:

Pride, lust, covetize, being several To these three places, yet all are in all;

Mingled thus, their issue is incestuous; Falshood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous.

DENOMINABLE. adj. [from denomino, Latin.] That may be named or denoted.

An inflammation consists of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler.

To DENOMINATE. v. a. [from denomino, Latin.] To name; to give a name to.

The commendable purpose of consecration being not of every one understood, they have been construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorious creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places.

Predestination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious, to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understanding, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we of our wills?

DENOMINATION. n. f. [from denomino, Lat.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians?

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the Heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination.

DENOMINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.] 1. That which gives a name; that which confers a distinct appellation.

2. That which obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominable.

To DEPRECIATE. v. a. [depreciare, Lat.]

1. To bring a thing down to a lower price.

2. To undervalue.

They presumed upon that mercy, which, in all their conversations, they endeavour to depreciate and misrepresent. Addison.

As there are none more ambitious of fame, than those who are coiners in poetry, it is very natural for such as have not succeeded in it to depreciate the works of those who have. Spektor.

To DEPREDATE. v. a. [depredari, Latin.]

1. To rob; to pillage.

2. To spoil; to devour.

It maketh the substance of the body more solid and compact, and so less apt to be consumed and depredated by the spirits. Bacon.

DEPREDATION. n. f. [depredatio, Lat.]

1. A robbing; a spoiling.

Commissioners were appointed to determine all matters of piracy and depredations between the subjects of both kingdoms. Hayward.

The land had never been before so free from robberies and depredations as through his reign. Wotton.

Were there not one who had said, Hitherto shalt thou come and no farther, we might well expect such vicissitudes, such clashing in nature, and such depredations and changes of sea and land. Woodward.

2. Voracity; waste.

The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in nothing more visible than in the sudden discharge or vanishing of a little cloud of breath, or vapour from glass, or the blade of a sword, or any such polished body. Bacon.

DEPREDATOR. n. f. [depredator, Lat.] A robber; a devourer.

It is reported, that the shrub called our Lady's Seal, which is a kind of briony, and coleworts, set near together, one or both will die: the cause is, for that they be both great depredators of the earth, and one of them starveth the other. Bacon.

We have three that collect the experiments, which are in all books; these we call depredators. Bacon.

To DEPREHEND. v. a. [deprehendo, Latin.]

1. To catch one; to take unawares; to take in the fact.

That wretched creature, being deprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.

Who can believe men upon their own authority, that are once deprehended in so gross and impious an imposture. Morc.

2. To discover; to find out a thing; to come to the knowledge or understanding of.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies, which do so great effects, are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be deprehended by experience. Bacon.

The same thing I have tried by letting a globe rest, and raising or depressing the eye, or otherwise moving it to make the angle of a just magnitude. Newton.

3. To humble; to deject: to sink.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty, and conclude that the making any progress in knowledge is above their capacities. Locke.

If we consider how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life. Addison.

Passion can depress or raise

The heavenly, as the human mind. Prior.

DEPRESSION. n. f. [depressio, Lat.]

1. The act of pressing down.

Bricks of a rectangular form, if laid one by another in a level row between supporters sustaining the two ends, all the pieces between will necessarily sink by their own gravity; and much more, if they suffer any depression by other weight above them. Wotton.

2. The sinking or falling in of a surface.

The beams of light are such subtle bodies, that, in respect of them, even surfaces that are sensibly smooth, are not exactly so: they have their own degree of roughness, consisting of little protuberances and depressions; and consequently such inequalities may suffice to give bodies different colours, as we see in marble that appears white or black, or red or blue, even when most carefully polished. Boyle.

If the bone be much depressed, and the fissure considerably large, it is then at your choice, whether you will enlarge that fissure, or continue it for the evacuation of the matter, and forbear the use of the trepan; not doubting but a small depression of the bone will either rise, or cast off, by the benefit of nature. Wijeman.

3. The act of humbling; abasement.

Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute, but less safe. Bacon.

DEPRESSION of an Equation [in algebra], is the bringing it into lower and more simple terms by division. DiG.

DEPRESSION of a Star. [with astronomers], is the distance of a star from the horizon below, and is measured by the arch of the vertical circle or azimuth, passing through the star, intercepted between the star and the horizon. DiG.

DEPRESSOR. n. f. [depressor, Latin.]

1. He that keeps or presses down.

2. An oppressor.

DEPRESSOR. [In anatomy.] A term given to several muscles of the body, whose action is to depress the parts to which they adhere.

DEPRIMENT. adj. [from deprimere, of deprimo, Lat.] An epithet applied to one of the straight muscles that move the globe or ball of the eye, its use being to pull it downwards.

The exquisite equilibration of all opposite and antagonist muscles is effected partly by the natural posture of the body and the eye, which is the case of the attolent and depriment muscles. Derham.

DEPRIVATION. n. f. [from de and privatio, Lat.]

1. The act of depriving, or taking away from.

2. The state of losing.

Fools whose end is destruction, and eternal deprivation of being. Bentley.

DEPRIVATION [in law], is when a clergyman, as a bishop, parson, vicar or prebend, is deprived, or deposed from his preferment, for any matter in fact or law. Philips.

To DEPRIVE. v. a. [from de and privare, Lat.]

1. To bereave one of a thing; to take it away from him: with of.

God hath deprived her of wisdom, neither hath he imparted to her understanding. Job. xxxix. 17.

Now wretched Oedipus, deprived of sight.

Led a long death in everlasting night. Pope.

2. To hinder; to debar from: Milton uses it without of.

From

DEP

From his face I shall be hid, depriv'd
His blessed countenance.
The ghosts rejected, are th' unhappy crew,
Depriv'd of sepulchres, and funeral due.
3. To release; to free from.
Most happy he,
Whose least delight sufficeth to deprive Remembrance of all pains which him oppress.

4. To put out of an office.
A minister, deprived for inconformity, said, that if they deprived him, it should cost an hundred men's lives.

DEPTH. n. f. [from deep, of diep, Dutch.]
1. Deepness; the measure of any thing from the surface downwards.

As for men, they had buildings in many places higher than the depth of the water.

We have large and deep caves of several depths:
the deepest are sunk six hundred fathoms.

The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends.

For though, in nature, depth and height
Are equally held infinite;

In poetry the height we know
'Tis only infinite below.

2. Deep place; not a shoal.
The false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray.

3. The abyss; a gulph of infinite profundity.
When he prepared the heavens I was there,
when he set a compass upon the face of the depth.

4. The middle or height of a season.
And in the depth of winter, in the night,
You plow the raging seas to coasts unknown.

The earl of Newcastle, in the depth of winter, rescued the city of York from the rebels.

5. Abstruseness; obscurity.
There are greater depths and obscurities in an elaborate and well-written piece of nonfence, than in the most abstruse tract of school divinity.

DEPTH of a Squadron or Battalion, is the number of men in the file.

To DEPTHEN. v. a. [diepen, Dutch.] To deepen, or make deeper.

To DEPU'CELATE. v. a. [depuceler, Fr.] To de-flower; to bereave of virginity.

DEPU'LSION. n. f. [depulsio, Latin.] A beating or thrusting away.

DEPU'LSORY. adj. [from depulsus, Lat.] Putting away; averting.

To DEPURATE. v. a. [depurer, Fr. from depurgare, Lat.] To purify; to cleanse; to free any thing from its impurities.

Chemistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and in some measure to analyze them, and take a-funder their heterogeneous parts, in many chemical experiments we may better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ.

DEPURATE. adj. [from the verb.]
1. Cleaned; freed from dregs and impurities.
2. Pure; not contaminated.

Neither can any boast a knowledge depurate from the defilement of a contrary, within this atmosphere of flesh.

DEPURATION. n. f. [depuratio, Lat.]
1. The act of separating the pure from the impure part of any thing.

Brimstone is a mineral body, of fat and inflammable parts; and this is either used crude, and called sulphur vive, or is of a fadder colour and, after deputation, such as we have in magdeleons,
or rolls of a lighter yellow.

What hath been hitherto discoursed, inclines us to look upon the ventilation and deputation of the blood as one of the principal and constant uses of respiration.

2. The cleansing of a wound from its matter.
To DEPU'RE. v. a. [depurer, Fr.]

1. To cleanse; to free from impurities.
2. To purge; to free from some noxious quality.
It produced plants of such imperfection and harmful quality, as the waters of the general flood could not so wash out or depure, but that the same defection hath had continuance in the very generation and nature of mankind.

DEPUTATION. n. f. [deputation, Fr.]
1. The act of deputing, or sending away with a special commission.

2. Vicegerency; the possession of any commission given.

Cut me off the heads
Of all the fav'rites that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war.

He looks not below the moon, but hath designed the regiment of sublunary affairs into sub-lunary deputations.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God.

To DEPU'TE. v. a. [deputor, Fr.] To send with a special commission: to empower one to transact
instead of another.

And Abfalom said unto him, See thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed
of the king to hear.

And Linus thus, deputed by the rest,
The heroes welcome, and their thanks express'd.

A bishop, by deputing a priest or chaplain to administer the sacraments, may remove him.

DEPUTY. n. f. [deputé, Fr. from deputatus, Lat.]
1. A lieutenant; a viceroy; one that is appointed by a special commission to govern or act
instead of another.

He exerciseth dominion over them as the vicegerent and deputy of Almighty God.

He was vouch'd his immediate deputy upon earth, and viceroy of the creation, and lord lietenant of the world.

2. Any one that transacts business for another.
Presbyters, absent through infirmity from their churches, might be said to preach by those deputies, who, in their stead, did but read homilies.

A man hath a body, and that body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices of life are, as it were, granted to him and his deputy;
for he may exercise them by his friend.

3. [In law.] One that exercises any office or other thing in another man's right, whose forfeiture or misdemeanour shall cause the officer or person for whom he acts to lose his office.

To DEQUANTITATE. v. a. [from de and quantitas, Lat.] To diminish the quantity of.

This we affirm of pure gold; for that which is current, and passeth in stamp amongst us, by reason of its alloy, which is a proportion of silver or copper mixed therewith, is actually dequantitated by fire, and possibly by frequent extinction.

DER. A term used in the beginning of names or places. It is generally to be derived from deop, a wild beast, unless the place stands upon a river; for then it may rather be fetched from the British der, i. e. water.

To DERACINATE. v. a. [deraciner, Fr.]
1. To pluck or tear up by the roots.

Her fallow leas,
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon; while that the cuteer rusts
That should deracinate such savagery.

To DERAIGN. v. a. [disrationare, or diratio-to DERATIN. n. f. [deratio, Lat.]

1. To prove; to justify.
When the parson of any church is disturbed to demand tithes in the next parish by a writ of indicavit, the patron shall have a writ to demand the advowson of the tithes being in demand; and when it is deraigned, then shall the plea pass in the court christian, as far forth as it is deraigned in the king's court.

2. To disorder; to turn out of course.

DER

DERAIGNMENT. n. f. [from deraign.]
DERAIGNMENT. n. f. [from deraign.]
1. The act of deraigning or proving.

2. A disordering or turning out of course.
3. A discharge of profession; a departure out of religion.

In some places the substantive deraignment is used in the very literal signification with the French desfrayer, or disfranger: that is, turning out of course, displacing, or setting out of order; as deraignment or departure out of religion, and deraignment or discharge of their profession, which is spoken of those religious men who forsook their orders and professions.

DERA'Y. n. f. [from desfrayer, Fr. to turn out of the right way.]
1. Tumult; disorder; noise.

2. Merriment; jollity; solemnity: not in use.

To DERE. v. a. [deujan, Sax.] To hurt. Obsolete. Some think that in the example it means during.

So from immortal race he does proceed,
That mortal hands might not withstand its might;
Dred for his deriving doe, and bloody deed;
For all in blood and spoil is his delight.

DERELICTION. n. f. [derelictio, Lat.]
1. The act of forsaking or leaving; abandonment.

2. The state of being forsaken.
There is no other thing to be looked for, but the effects of God's most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion.

DERELICTS. n. f. pl. [in law.] Goods wilfully thrown away, or relinquished by the owner.

To DERIDE. v. a. [derideo, Lat.] To laugh at;
to mock; to turn to ridicule; to scorn.

Before such preference to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loath as they who most reprehend or deride what we do.

What shall be the portion of those who have derided God's word and made a mock of every thing that is sacred and religious?

These sons, ye gods, who with flagitious pride Insult my darkness, and my groans deride.

Some that adore Newton for his fluxions, deride him for his religion.

DERIDER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A mocker; a scoffer.

Upon the wilful violation of oaths, execrable blasphemies, and like contempts offered by deriders of religion, fearful tokens of divine revenge have been known to follow.

2. A droll; a buffoon.
DERISION. n. f. [derisio, Lat.]

1. The act of deriding or laughing at.
Are we grieved with the scorn and derision of the profane? Thus was the blessed Jesus despised and rejected of men.

Vanity is the natural weakness of an ambitious man, which exposes him to the secret scorn and derision of those he converses with.

2. Contempt; scorn; a laughing-stock.
I am in derision daily; every one mocketh me.

Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.

Ensnar'd, assaulted, overcome; led bound,
Thy foes derision, captive, poor, and blind,
Into a dungeon thrust.

DERISIVE. adj. [from deride.] Mocking; scoffing.

O'er all the dome they quaff, they feast:
Derisive taunts were spread from guest to guest,
And each in jovial mood his mate address'd.

DERISORY. adj. [derisorius, Lat.] Mocking; ridiculing.

DERIVABLE. adj. [from derive.] Attainable
by right of descent or derivation.

God has declared this the eternal rule and standard of all honour derivable upon me, that those who honour him shall be honoured by him.

DERIVATION.

DER

DERIVATION. n. f. [derivatio, Lat.]

1. A draining of water; a turning of its course; letting out.

When the water began to swell, it would every way discharge itself by any descents or declivities of the ground; and these issues and derivations being once made, and supplied with new waters pushing them forwards, would continue their course till they arrived at the sea, just as other rivers do. Burnet.

2. [In grammar.] The tracing of a word from its original.

Your lordship here seems to dislike my taking notice, that the derivation of the word Substance favours the idea we have of it; and your lordship tells me, that very little weight is to be laid on it, on a bare grammatical etymology. Locke.

3. The transmission of anything from its source. As touching traditional communication, and tradition of those truths that I call connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of those truths have had the help of that derivation.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. [In medicine.] The drawing of a humour from one part of the body to another.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote, or, it may be, contrary part, we call that revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wifeman.

3. The thing deduced or derived: not used. Most of them are the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to. *Glauville.*DERIVATIVE. adj. [derivativus, Lat.] Derived or taken from another.

As it is a derivative perfection, so it is a distinct kind of perfection from that which is in God. Hale.

DERIVATIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.] The thing or word derived or taken from another.

For honour,

'Tis a derivative from me to mine,And only that I stand for. Shakespeare.

The word Honestus originally and strictly signifies no more than creditable, and is but a derivative from honour, which signifies credit or honour. South.

DERIVATIVELY. adv. [from derivative.] In a derivative manner.To DERIVE. v. a. [deriver, Fr. from derivo, Latin.]

1. To turn the course of water from its channel.

Company lessens the shame of vice by sharing it, and abates the torrent of a common odium by deriving it into many channels. South.

2. To deduce; as from a root, from a cause, from a principle.

They endeavour to derive the varieties of colours from the various proportion of the direct progress or motion of these globules to their circumsolution, or motion about their own centre. Boyle.

Men derive their ideas of duration from their reflection on the train of ideas they observe to succeed one another in their own understandings. Locke.

From these two causes of the laxity and rigidity of the fibres, the methodists, an ancient set of physicians, derived all diseases of human bodies with a great deal of reason; for the fluids derive their qualities from the solids. Arbutnot.

3. To communicate to another, as from the origin and source.

Christ having Adam's nature as we have, but incorrupt, deriveth not nature, but incorruption, and that immediately from his own person, unto all that belong unto him. Hooker.

4. To receive by transmission.

This property seems rather to have been derived from the Pretorian soldiers. Decay of Piety.

The censers of these wretches, who, I am sure, could derive no sanctity to them from their own persons; yet upon this account, that they had been consecrated by the offering incense in them, were,

by God's special command, sequestered from all common use. South.

5. To communicate to by descent of blood.

Besides the readiness of parts, an excellent disposition of mind is derived to your lordship from the parents of two generations, to whom I have the honour to be known. Felton.

6. To spread; to diffuse gradually from one place to another.

The streams of the publick justice were derived into every part of the kingdom. Davies.

7. [In grammar.] To trace a word from its origin.

To DERIVE. v. n.

1. To come from; to owe its origin to.

He that resists the power of Ptolemy, Resists the pow'r of heav'n; for pow'r from heav'n Derives, and monarchs rule by gods appointed. Prior.

2. To descend from.

I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,As well possessest. *Shakespeare.*DERIVER. n. f. [from derivo.] One that draws or fetches, as from the source or principle.

Such a one makes a man not only a partaker of other mens sins, but also a deriver of the whole intire guilt of them to himself. South.

DERN. ad. [veajun, Saxon.]

1. Sad; solitary.

2. Barbarous; cruel. Obsolete.

DERNIER. adj. Last. It is a mere French word, and used only in the following phrase.

In the Imperial chamber, the term for the prosecution of an appeal is not circumscribed by the term of one or two years, as the law elsewhere requires in the Empire, this being the dernier resort and supreme court of judicature. Ayliffe.

To DEROGATE. v. a. [derogo, Lat.]1. To do an act so far contrary to a law or custom, as to diminish its former extent; distinguishing from abrogate.

By several contrary customs and styles used here, many of those civil and canon laws are controuled and derogated. Hale.

2. To lessen the worth of any person or thing; to vilify.

To DEROGATE. *v. n.*1. To detract; to lessen reputation, with from. We should be injurious to virtue itself, if we did derogate from them whom their industry hath made great. Hooker.

2. To degenerate; to act beneath one's rank, or place, or birth.

Is there no derogation in't?

—You cannot derogate, my lord. *Shakespeare.*DEROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Degraded; damaged; lessened in value.

Into her womb convey sterility;

Dry up in her the organs of increase,

And from her derogate body never spring.A babe to honour her! *Shakespeare's King Lear.*DEROGATION. n. f. [derogatio, Latin.]

1. The act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians. Bacon.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law. South.

2. A defamation; detraction; the act of lessening or taking away the honour of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after resolute to maintain. Hooker.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no disparage. Spenser on Ireland.

DER

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. Bacon.

I say not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise. Dryden.

None of these patriots will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they receive many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers. Addison.

DEROGATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Lat.] Derogating; lessening the honour of: not in use.

That spirits are corporeal seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEROGATORILY. adv. [from derogatory.] In a detracting manner. *Diels.*DEROGATORINESS. n. f. [from derogatory.] The act of derogating. *Diels.*DEROGATORY. adj. [derogatorius, Latin.] Detracting; that lessens the honour of; dishonourable.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God and the wisdom of the creation. Brown.

These deputed beings are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the Author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Chym.

DE'RVIS. n. f. [dervis, French.] A Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach, Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sandys.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying brachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Spectator.

DESCANT. n. f. [dis-canto, Italian.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay, now you are too flat,

And mar the concord with too harsh a descant. Shakespeare.

The wakeful nightingale

All night long her amorous descant sung. Milton.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure or contempt.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand, And stand between two churchmen, good my lord; For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakespeare.

Kindness would supplant our unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our brethren. Government of the Tongue.

The Grecian fleet, descending on the town. Dryden.
A foreign son upon the shore descends,
Whose martial fame from pole to pole extends.

Dryden.

6. To proceed as from an original; to be derived from.

Despair descends from a mean original; the offspring of fear, laziness, and impatience.

Collier against Despair.

Will is younger brother to a baronet, and descends d of the ancient family of the Wimbles. Addison.

7. To fall in order of inheritance to a successor.
Should we allow that all the property, all the estate of the father, ought to descend to the eldest son; yet the father's natural dominion, the paternal power, cannot descend unto him by inheritance.

Locke.

The inheritance of both rule over men and property, in things sprung from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Our author provides for the descending and conveyance down of Adam's monarchical power to posterity, by the inheritance of his heir, succeeding to his father's authority.

Locke.

8. To extend a discourse from general to particular considerations.

Congregations discerned the small accord that was among themselves, when they descended to particulars.

Decay of Piety.

To DESCEND. v. a. To walk downward upon any place.

He ended, and they both descend the hill;
Descended Adam to the bow'r, where Eve lay sleeping.

Milton.

In all our journey through the Alps, as well when we climbed as when we descended them, we had still a river running along with the road. Addison.

In the midst of this plain stands a high hill, so very steep, that there would be no mounting or descending it, were not it made up of a loose crumbled earth.

Addison.

DESCENDANT. n. f. [descendant, Fr. descendant, Latin.] The offspring of an ancestor; he that is in the line of generation at whatever distance.

The descendants of Neptune were planted there.

Bacon.

O, true descendant of a patriot line,
Vouchsafe this picture of thy soul to see. Dryden.
He revealed his own will and their duty, in a more ample manner than it had been declared to any of my descendants before them.

Atterbury.

DESCENDENT. adj. [descendens, Latin.] It seems to be established that the substantive should derive the termination from the French, and the adjective from the Latin.

1. Falling; sinking; coming down; descending.

There is a regress of the sap in plants from above downwards; and this descendent juice is that which principally nourishes both fruit and plant. Ray.

2. Proceeding from another as an original or ancestor.

More than mortal grace
Speaks thee descendent of æthereal race. Pope.

DESCENDIBLE. adj. [from descend.]

1. Such as may be descended; such as may admit of a passage downwards.

2. Transmissible by inheritance.

According to the customs of other countries those honorary fees and infeudations were descendible to the eldest, and not to all the males.

Hale's Common Law of England.

DESCENSION. n. f. [descensio, Latin.]

1. The act of going downwards, falling or sinking; descent.

2. A declension; a degradation.
From a god to a bull! a heavy descension!

It was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice! a low transformation: that shall be mine.

Shakespeare.

3. [In astronomy.] Right descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign or star below the horizon of a direct sphere.

Oblique descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign below the horizon of an oblique sphere.

Ozanam.

DESCENSIONAL. adj. [from descension.] Relating to descent.

DESCENT. n. f. [descensus, Latin; descente, French.]

1. The act of passing from a higher to a lower place.

Why do fragments, from a mountain rent,
Tend to the earth with such a swift descent?

Blackmore.

2. Progress downwards.
Observing such gradual and gentle descents downwards, in those parts of the creation that are beneath men, the rule of analogy may make it probable, that it is so also in things above.

Locke.

3. Obliquity; inclination.
The heads and sources of rivers flow upon a descent, or an inclining plane, without which they could not flow at all.

Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iii.

4. Lowest place.
From th' extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy feet.

Shakespeare.

5. Fall from a higher state; degradation.
O soul descent, that I who erst contended
With Gods to fit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast, and mix with bestial slime

Milton.

This effluence to incarnate and inbrute.

6. Invasion; hostile entrance into a kingdom: in allusion to the height of ships.

At the first descent on shore, he was not immured With a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat.

Watson.

The duke was general himself, and made that unfortunate descent upon the Isle of Ree, which was attended with a miserable retreat, in which the flower of the army was lost.

Clarendon.

Arise, true judges, in your own defence,
Controul those foppings, and declare for sense;

For should the fools prevail, they stop not there,
But make their next descent upon the fair.

Dryden.

7. Transmission of any thing by succession and inheritance.

If the agreement and consent of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hand, that also must direct its descent and conveyance.

Locke.

8. The state of proceeding from an original or progenitor.

All of them, even without such a particular claim, had great reason to glory in their common descent from Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, to whom the promise of the blessed seed was severally made.

Atterbury.

9. Birth; extraction; process of lineage.

I give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent!

Shakespeare.

God knows, I will not do it.

Ternus, for high descent and graceful mien,
Was first, and favour'd by the Latian queen.

Dryden.

10. Offspring; inheritors; those proceeding in the line of generation.

The care of our descent perplexes us most,
Which must be born to certain woe.

Milton.

From him
His whole descent; who thus shall Canaan win.

Milton.

11. A single step in the scale of genealogy; a generation.

No man living is a thousand descents removed from Adam himself.

Hooker.

Then all the sons of these five brethren reign'd,
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents: the crown retain'd,
'Till aged Heli by due heritage it gain'd.

Fairy Queen.

12. A rank in the scale of subordination.

How have I then, with whom to hold converse, Save with the creatures which I made, and those
To me inferior; infinite descents

Beneath what other creatures are to thee? Milton.
To DESCRIBE. v. a. [describo, Latin.]

1. To delineate; to mark out: to trace: as a torch waved about the head describes a circle.

2. To mark out any thing by the mention of its properties.

I pray thee, overname them; and as thou nam'st them, I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection.

Shakespeare.

He that writes well in verse will often send his thoughts in search, through all the treasure of words that express any one idea in the same language, that so he may comport with the measures of the rhyme, or with his own most beautiful and vivid sentiments of the thing he describes.

3. To distribute into proper heads or divisions.
Men pass'd through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts in a book.

4. To define a lax manner by the promiscuous mention of qualities general and peculiar. See DESCRIPTION.

DESCRIBER. n. f. [from describo.] He that describes.

From a plantation and colony, an island near Spain was by the Greek describers named Erythra.

DESCRIBER. n. f. [from the verb.] A discoverer; a detector.

The glad describer shall not miss
To taste the nectar of a kiss.

DESCRIPTION. n. f. [descriptio, Latin.]

1. The act of delineating or expressing any person or thing by perceptible properties.

2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.

A poet must refuse all tedious and unnecessary descriptions: a robe which is too heavy, is less an ornament than a burthen.

Sometimes misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams immortaliz'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie,
Dumb are their fountains, and their channels dry,
That run for ever by the muse's skill,
And in the smooth description murmur still.

3. A lax definition.

The sort of definition which is made up of a mere collection of the most remarkable parts or properties, is called an imperfect definition, or a description; whereas the definition is called perfect when it is composed of the essential differences added to general nature or genus.

4. The qualities expressed in a description.

I'll pay six thousand, and deface the bond,
Before a friend of this description!

Shall lose a hair. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

To DESCRIBE. v. a. [describo, French.]

1. To give notice of any thing suddenly discovered; as, the scout descried the enemy, or gave notice of their approach. This sense is now obsolete, but gave occasion to those which are now in use.

2. To spy out: to examine at a distance.

And the house of Joseph sent to descrie Bethel.

Edmund, I think, is gone to descrie
Th' strength o' th' enemy.

Our merchants, to their great charges, set forth fleets to descrie the seas.

3. To detect; to find out any thing concealed.

Of the king they got a fight after dinner in a gallery, and of the queen mother at her own table;
in neither place descried, nor not by Cadinet, who had been lately ambassador in England.

4. To discover; to perceive by the eye: to see any thing distant or obscure.

Vol. I. N^o. 13. 3 M Thus

Thus dight, into the court he took his way ;
Both through the guard, which never him desery'd
And through the watchmen, who him never spy'd.

Hubbard's Tale.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath ;

What's past and what's to come she can desery.

Shakespeare.

That planet would, unto our eyes, deserying only that part whereon the light falls, appear to be horned, as the moon seems.

Raleigh.

And now their way to earth they had desery'd,
To Paradise first tending.

Milton.

Although the motion of light be not desery'd, no argument can be made from thence to prove that light is not a body.

Digby.

A tow'r so high, it seem'd to reach the sky,
Stood on the roof, from whence we could desery
All Ilium.

Denham.

Once more at least look back, said I,

Thyself in that large glass desery.

Prior.

DESCRY, n. f. [from the verb.] Discovery ;
thing discovered.

How near's the other army ?

—Near, and on speedy foot, the main desery

Stands on that hourly thought.

Shakespeare.

To DESECRATE, v. a. [desecro, Latin.] To divert from the purpose to which any thing is consecrated.

The founders of monasteries imprecated evil on those who should desecrate their donations.

Salmon's Survey.

DESECRATION, n. f. [from desecrate.] The abolition of consecration.

DE'SERT, n. f. [desertum, Latin.] A wilderness ; solitude ; waste country ; uninhabited place.

Be alive again,

And dare me to the desert with thy sword.

If trembling I inhibit ; then protest me

The baby of a girl.

Shakespeare.

He, looking round on every side, beheld

A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades.

Milton.

DE'SERT, adj. [desertus, Latin.] Wild ; waste ;
solitary ; uninhabited ; uncultivated ; untill'd.

I have words

That would be howl'd out in the desert air,

Where hearing should not catch them.

Shakespeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness.

Deut. xxxii. 10.

The promises and bargains between two men in a desert island are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another.

Locke.

To DESERT, v. a. [deserter, French ; desero,
Latin.]

1. To forsake ; to fall away from ; to leave meanly or treacherously ; to abandon.

I do not remember one man, who heartily wished the passing of that bill, that ever deserted them till the kingdom was in a flame.

Dryden.

2. To leave ; to quit.

What is it that holds and keeps the orbs in fixed stations and intervals, against an incessant and inherent tendency to desert them ?

Bentley.

3. To quit the army, or regiment, in which one is enlisted.

DESERT, n. f. [properly desert : the word is originally French.] The last course ; the fruit or sweetmeats with which a feast is concluded. See DESSERT.

DESERT, n. f. [from deserve.]

1. Qualities or conduct considered with respect to rewards or punishments ; degree of merit or demerit.

Being of necessity a thing common, it is, through the manifold persuasions, dispositions, and occasions of men, with equal desert both of praise and dispraise, shunned by some, by others desired.

Hooker.

The base o' th' mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,

That labour on the bosom of this sphere

To propagate their states.

Shakespeare.

Use every man after his desert, and who shall scape whipping ?

Shakespeare.

2. Proportional merit ; claim to reward.

All desert imports an equality between the good conferred, and the good deserved, or made due.

South.

3. Excellence ; right to reward ; virtue.

More to move you,

Take my deserts to his, and join them both.

Shakespeare.

DESERTER, n. f. [from desert.]

1. He that has forsaken his cause or his post :
commonly in an ill sense.

The members of both houses, who at first withdrew, were counted deserters, and outed of their places in parliament.

King Charles.

Streight to their ancient calls, recall'd from air,
The reconcil'd deserters will repair.

Dryden.

Hofts of deserters, who your honour sold,
And safely broke your faith for bribes of gold.

Dryden.

2. He that leaves the army in which he is in-listed.

They are the same deserters, whether they stay in our own camp, or run over to the enemies.

Decay of Piety.

A deserter, who came out of the citadel, says the garrison is brought to the utmost necessity.

Taiter, N° 59.

3. He that forsakes another ; an abandoner.

The fair sex, if they had the deserter in their power, would certainly have shewn him more mercy than the Bacchanals did Orpheus.

Dryden.

Thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood.

Pope.

DESE'RTION, n. f. [from desert.]

1. The act of forsaking or abandoning a cause or post.

Every compliance that we are persuaded to by one, is a contradiction to the commands of the other ; and our adherence to one, will necessarily involve us in a desertion of the other.

Rogers.

2. [In theology.] Spiritual despondency ; a sense of the dereliction of God ; an opinion that grace is withdrawn.

Christ hears and sympathises with the spiritual agonies of a soul under desertion, or the pressures of some stinging affliction.

South.

DESE'RTLESS, adj. [from desert.] Without merit ; without claim to favour or reward.

She said the lov'd ;

Lov'd me desertless, who, with shame, confess
Another flame had seiz'd upon my breast.

Dryden.

To DESE'ERVE, v. a. [deservir, French.] To be worthy of either good or ill.

Those they honoured, as having power to work or cease, as men deserved of them.

Hooker.

Some of us love you well ; and even those some Envy your great deservings, and good name.

Shakespeare.

All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cup of their deservings.

Shakespeare.

What he deserves of you and me I know.

Shakespeare.

Yet well, if here would end

The misery : I deserv'd it, and would bear

My own deservings.

Milton.

A mother cannot give him death : though he Deserves it, he deserves it not from me.

Dryden.

Since my Orazia's death I have not seen

A beauty so deserving to be queen.

Dryden.

To DESE'ERVE, v. n. To be worthy of reward.

According to the rule of natural justice one man may merit and deserve of another.

South.

Courts are the places where best manners flourish,

Where the deserving ought to rise.

Otway.

He had been a person of great deservings from the republic, was an admirable speaker, and very popular.

Swift.

DESE'RVEDLY, adv. [from deserve.] Worthily ;
according to desert, whether of good or evil.

For him I was not sent, nor yet to free
That people victor once, now vile and base,

Milton.

Deservedly made vassal.

A man deservedly cuts himself off from the affections of that community which he endeavours to subvert.

Addison.

DESE'RVING, n. f. [from deserve.] A man who merits rewards. It is used, I think, only in a good sense.

Their love is never link'd to the deserver,
'Till his deserts are pass'd.

Shakespeare.

Heavy, with some high minds, is an overweight of obligation ; or otherwise great deservers do perchance grow intolerable presumers.

Watson.

Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are propos'd to the best deservers.

Dryden.

DESICCANTS, n. f. [from desiccate.] Applications that dry up the flow of fores ; driers.

This, in the beginning, may be prevented by desiccants, and wafted.

Wifeman.

To DESICCATE, v. a. [desiccio, Latin.]

1. To dry up ; to exhaust of moisture.

In bodies desiccated by heat or age, when the native spirit goeth forth, and the moisture with it,
the air with time getteth into the pores.

Bacon.

Seminal ferments were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places thereof, by the heat of the sun.

Hale.

2. To exhale moisture.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, there wine helpeth to digest and desiccate the moisture.

Bacon's Natural History.

DESICCATION, n. f. [from desiccate.] The act of making dry ; the state of being dried.

If the spirits issue out of the body, there followeth desiccation, induration, and consumption.

Bacon.

which has the power of drying.

To DESIDERATE, v. a. [desidero, Latin.] To want ; to miss ; to desire in absence. A word scarcely used.

Eclipses are of wonderful assistance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much desiderated problem.

Cheyns.

DESIDERATUM, [Latin.] Somewhat which enquiry has not yet been able to settle or discover ;
as, the longitude is the desideratum of navigation.
The trisection of an angle, and the quadrature of a circle, are the desiderata of geometry.

DESIDIOSE, adj. [desidisus, Latin.] Idle ; lazy ; heavy.

Dick.

To DESIGN, v. a. [designo, Latin ; dessiner, Fr.]

1. To purpose ; to intend any thing.

2. To form or order with a particular purpose ;
with for.

The acts of religious worship were purposely designed for the acknowledgment of a being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we.

Stillington.

You are not for obscurity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind.

Dryden.

3. To devote intentionally : with to.

One of those places was designed by the old man to his son.

Clarendon.

He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune ; he was designed to the study of the law.

Dryden.

4. To plan ; to project ; to form in idea.

We are to observe whether the picture or outlines be well drawn, or, as more elegant artizans term it, well designed ; then, whether it be well coloured, which be the two general heads.

Watson.

Thus while they speed their pace, the prince designs

The new elected feat, and draws the lines.

Dryden.

5. To mark out by particular tokens : little used.

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world ; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs.

Locke.

DESIGN, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An intention ; a purpose.

2. A scheme ; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any profpect to the remaining part of his life ?

Tillotson.

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A sedate settled design upon another man's life, puts

DES

puts him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention. Locke.

4. The idea which an artist endeavours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the designs of several Greek medals, one may often see the hand of an Apelles or Protogenes. Addison.

Thy hand strikes out some new design,
Where life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DESIGNABLE. adj. [designo, Latin.] Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited: the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant. Digby.

DESIGNATION. n. f. [designatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token.

This is a plain designation of the duke of Marlborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marle, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town. Swift.

2. Appointment; direction.

William the conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a titular pretence, grounded upon the will and designation of Edward the Confessor. Bacon.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designation only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

DESIGNEDLY. adv. [from design.] Purposely; intentionally; by design or purpose: not ignorantly; not inadvertently; not fortuitously.

Uses made things; that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose, for such an use as they serve to. Ray on the Creation.

The next thing is sometimes designedly to put children in pain; but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour. Locke.

DESIGNER. n. f. [from design.]

1. One that designs, intends, or purposes; a purposer.

2. A plotter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

It has therefore always been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to countenance and cover their private. Decay of Piety.

3. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between designing and poetry; for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman medals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same relish for wit and fancy. Addison.

DESIGNING. participial adj. [from design.] Infidious; treacherous; deceitful; fraudulently artful.

'Twould shew me poor, indebted, and compell'd,

Designing, mercenary; and I know
You would not wish to think I could be bought. Southern.

DESIGNLESS. adj. [from design.] Without intention; without design; unknowing; inadvertently.

DESIGNLESSLY. adv. [from designless.] Without intention; ignorantly; inadvertently.

In this great concert of his whole creation, the designlessly conspiring voices are as differing as the conditions of the respective fingers. Boyle.

DESIGNMENT. n. f. [from design.]

1. A purpose and intent.

The sanctity of the Christian religion excludes fraud and falsehood from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.

'Tis a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes and designments, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

2. A scheme of hostility.

DES

News, lords, our wars are done:

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. Shakespeare.
She received advice both of the king's desperate estate, and of the duke's designments against her. Hayward.

3. The idea, or sketch of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvases; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his right;

For though that some mean artist's skill were shown
In mingling colours, or in placing light,
Yet still the fair designment was his own. Dryden.

DESIRABLE. adj. [from desire.]

1. That which is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cafes, collected by men of great sagacity, will improve his mind, toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought. Watts.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of this will. Rogers.

2. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box; I immediately took the hint, and bought one, being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes. Addison.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Watts.

DESIRE. n. f. [desir, Fr. desco, Ital. desiderium, Lat.] Wish; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it. Locke.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Shakespeare.

Desire's vast extent of human mind;

It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind. Dryden.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the fort, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

To DESIRE. v. a. [desirer, French; desiderare, Latin.]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold. Deut. vii. 25.

2. To express wishes; to appear too long.

Jove beheld it with a desiring look. Dryden.

3. To ask; to intreat.

Sir, I intreat you home with me to dinner.
—I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night. Shakespeare.

But since you take such int'rest in our woe,
And Troy's disastrous end desire to know,
I will restrain my tears, and briefly tell
What in our last most fatal night befell. Dryden.

4. To require; to demand. Not in use.

A doleful case desires a doleful song,
Without vain art or curious compliments. Spenser.

DESIRER. n. f. [from desire.] One that is eager of any thing; a wisher.

I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakespeare.

DESIROUS. adj. [from desire.] Full of desire; eager; longing after; wishing for.

The same piety which maketh them that are in authority desirous to please and resemble God by justice, inflameth every way men of action with zeal to do good. Hooker.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Prov. xxiii. 3.

Men are drowsy and desirous to sleep before the fit of an ague, and yawn and stretch. Bacon.

Adam the while,
Waiting desirous her return, had wove
Of choicest flow'rs a garland. Milton.

DES

Conjugal affection,

Prevailing over fear and timorous doubt,
Hath led me on, desirous to behold
Once more thy face. Milton.

DESIROUSNESS. n. f. [from desirous.] Fulness of desire; eagerness. Dick.

To DESIST. v. n. [desisto, Latin.] To cease from any thing; to stop; with from.

Desist, thou art discern'd,
And toil'st in vain; nor me in vain molest. Milton.

There are many who will not quit a project, though they find it pernicious or absurd; but will readily desist from it, when they are convinced it is impracticable. Addison.

DESISTANCE. n. f. [from desist.] The act of desisting; cessation.

Men usually give freeleave where they have not given before: and make it both the motive and excuse of their desistance from giving any more, that they have given already. Boyle.

DESISTIVE. adj. [desistus, Latin.] Ending: conclusive; final.

Inceptive and desistive propositions are of this sort: the fogs vanish as the sun rises, but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish; therefore the sun is not yet risen. Watts.

DESK. n. f. [disch, a table, Dutch.] An inclining table for the use of writers or readers, made commonly with a box or repository under it.

Tell her in the desk,

That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats. Shakespeare.

He is drawn leaning on a desk, with his bible before him. Walton's Angler.

I have been obliged to leave unfinished in my desk the heads of two essays. Pope.

Not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expence,

Nor standish well japann'd, avails

To writing of good sense. Swift.

DESOLATE. adj. [desolatus, Latin.]

1. Without inhabitants; uninhabited.

Let us seek some desolate shade, and there
Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakespeare.

This hero appears at first in a desolate island, sitting upon the side of the sea. Brome.

2. Deprived of inhabitants; laid waste.

This city will be desolate, without an inhabitant. Jer. xxvi.

3. Solitary; without society.

To DESOLATE. v. a. [desolo, Latin.] To deprive of inhabitants; to lay waste; to make desert.

The island of Atlantis was not swallowed by an earthquake, but was desolated by a particular deluge. Bacon.

Thick around

Thunders the sport of those, who with the gun

And dog, impatient bounding at the shot,

Worse than the season, desolate the fields. Thomson.

DESOLATELY. adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner.

DESOLATION. n. f. [from desolate.]

1. Destruction of inhabitants; reduction to solitude.

What with your praises of the country, what with your discourse of the lamentable desolation thereof made by those Scots, you have filled me with a great compassion. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Without her follows to myself and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,

Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shakespeare.

2. Gloominess; sadness; melancholy; destitution.

That dwelling place is unnatural to mankind; and then the terribleness of the continual motion, the desolation of the far being from comfort, the eye and the ear having ugly images before it, doth still vex the mind, even when it is best armed against it. Sidney.

Then your hose shall be ungartered, and every thing about you demonstrate a careless desolation.

3 M 2

My desolation does begin to make
A better life. Shakespeare.

To complete
The scene of desolation stretch'd around,
The grim guards stand. Thomson.

3. A place wasted and forsaken.
How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! Jeremiah, l. 23.

DESPAIR. n. f. [despair, French.]
1. Hopelessness; despondence; loss of hope.
Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works differently in mens minds, sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency. Locke.

You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope, or never discovered it, stoop with despair. Sidney.

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed;
we are perplexed, but not in despair. 2 Cor. iv. 8.

Weary'd, forsaken, and pursu'd at last,
All safety in despair of safety plac'd,
Courage he thence resumes, resolv'd to bear
All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear. Denb.

Equal their flame, unequal was their care;
One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair.
Dryden.

2. That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.

Strangely visited people,
All swol'n and ulc'rous, pitiful to the eye:
The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakespeare.

3. [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.
Are not all or most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extremes? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other: may not hope in God, or godly sorrow, be perverted into presumption or despair? Spratt.

To DESPAIR. v. n. [despero, Lat.] To be without hope; to despond: with of before a noun.

Though thou drewest a sword at thy friend,
yet despair not; for there may be a turning.
Ecclesi. xxii. 21.

We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despair of making of gold, but are mad upon making of silver. Bacon.

Never despair of God's blessing here, or of his reward hereafter; but go on as you have begun.
Wake.

DESPAIRER. n. f. [from despair.] One without hope.

He cheers the fearful, and commends the bold,
And makes despairers hope for good success. Dry.
DESPAIRFUL. adj. [despair and full.] Hopeless. Obsolete.

That sweet but four despairful care. Sidney.
Other cries amongst the Irish, favour of the Scythian barbarism; as the lamentations of their burials, with despairful outcries. Spenser.

DESPAIRINGLY. adv. [from despairing.] In a manner betokening hopelessness or despondency.
He speaks severely and despairingly of our society. Boyle.

To DESPA'TCH. v. a. [despatcher, French.]
1. To fend away hastily.

Doctor Theodore Coleby, a sober man, I despatched immediately to Utrecht, to bring the moxa, and learn the exact method of using it. Temple.

The good Æneas, whose paternal care
Despatch'd Achates to the ships in haste,
To give a glad relation of the past. Dryden.

2. To send out of the world; to put to death.

Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery to despatch
His knighted life. Shakespeare.

And the company shall stone them with stones,
and despatch them with their swords.
Ezek. xxiii. 47.

In combating, but two of you will fall;
And we resolve we will despatch you all. Dryden.

Despatch me quickly, I may death forgive;
I shall grow tender else, and wish to live. Dryden.

3. To perform a business quickly; as, I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.

Therefore commanded he his chariot-man to drive without ceasing, and to despatch the journey, the judgment of God now following him. 2 Mac.

No sooner is one action despatched, which, by such a determination as the will, we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work.
Locke.

4. To conclude an affair with another.
What, are the brothers parted?
—They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone.
Shakespeare.

DESPA'TCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Hasty execution; speedy performance.

Affected despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. Bacon.

You'd see, could you her inward motions watch,
Feigning delay, she wishes for despatch;
Then to a woman's meaning would you look,
Then read her backward. Granville.

The despatch of a good office is very often as beneficial to the solicitor as the good office itself.
Addison.

2. Conduct; management. Obsolete.
You shall put
This night's great business into my despatch,
Which shall, to all our nights and days to come,
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.
Shakespeare.

3. Express; hasty messenger or message; as, despatches were sent away.

DESPA'TCHFUL. adj. [from despatch.] Bent on haste; intent on speedy execution of business.

So saying, with despatchful looks in haste
She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent. Milton.

Let one despatchful bid some swain to lead
A well fed bullock from the grassy mead. Pope.

DESPERATE. adj. [desperatus, Latin.]
1. Without hope.

Since his exile he hath despis'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her. Shakespeare.

2. Without care of safety; rash; precipitant;
fearless of danger.

Can you think, my lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel,
Or be a known friend 'gainst his highness' pleasure,
Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,
And live a subject? Shakespeare.

He who goes on without any care or thought of reforming, such an one we vulgarly call a desperate person, and that sure is a most damning sin.
Hammond.

3. Irretrievable; unfurmountable; irrecoverable.
These debts may be well called desperate ones;
for a mad man owes them. Shakespeare.

In a part of Asia the sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth, before they are dead, and left there. Locke.

I am a man of desperate fortunes, that is, a man whose friends are dead; for I never aimed at any other fortune than in friends. Pope to Swift.

4. Mad; hot-brained; furious.
Were it not the part of a desperate physician to with his friend dead, rather than to apply the best endeavours of his skill for his recovery? Spenser.

5. It is sometimes used in a sense nearly ludicrous, and only marks any bad quality predomi-nating in a high degree.

Concluding all mere desperate fots and fools,
That durst depart from Aristotle's rules Pope.

DESPERATELY. adv. [from desperate.]
1. Furiously; madly; without attention to safety or danger.

Your eldest daughters have foredone themselves,
And desperately are dead. Shakespeare.

There might be somewhat in it, that he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately as before he had done uncivilly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. In a great degree; violently; this sense is ludicrous.

She fell desperately in love with him, and took a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him. Addison.

DESPERATENESS. n. f. [from desperate.] Madness; fury; precipitance.

The going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also; and the more bold thus, the more desperate. Hammond.

DESPERATION. n. f. [from desperate.] Hopelessness; despair; despondency.

Desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them. Shakespeare.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success chills all our industry, and we sin on, because we have sinned. Hammond.

DESPICABLE. adj. [despicabilis, Lat.] Contemptible; vile; mean; sordid; worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God were in his sight so vile and despicable as mens disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

Their heads as low.
Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears:
Of despicable foes. Milton.

All th' earth he gave thee to possess and rule,
No despicable gift. Milton.

Not less ev'n in this despicable hero,
Then when my name shook Africk with affright,
And froze your hearts beneath your torrid zone.
Dryden.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other.
Addison.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in. Addison.

DESPICABLENESS. n. f. [from despicable.]
Meanness; vileness; worthlessness.

We consider the great disproportion between the infinity of the reward and the despicableness of our service. Decay of Piety.

DESPICABLY. adv. [from despicable.] Meanly;
sordidly; vilely.

Here wanton Naples crowns the happy shore,
Nor vainly rich, nor despicably poor;
The town in soft solemnities delights,
And gentle poets to her arms invites. Addison.

DESPISABLE. adj. [from despise.] Contemptible; despicable; regarded with contempt. A word scarcely used but in low conversation.

I am obliged to you for taking notice of a poor old distressed courtier, commonly the most despiseable thing in the world. Arbutnot to Pope.

To DESPISE. v. a. [despiser, old French, Skis-ner; despicio, Latin.]

1. To scorn; to contemn; to slight; to disrespect.
For, lo, I will make thee small among the Heathen, and despised among men. Jer. xlix. 15.

My sons their old unhappy fire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.

2. In Shakespeare it seems once to signify abhor, as from the Italian despitare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakespeare.

DESPISER. n. f. [from despise.] Contemner; scorner.

Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress?
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shakesp.

Wisdom is commonly, at long running, justified even of her despisers. Government of the Tongue.

Thus the atheists, libertines, and despisers of religion, usually pass under the name of free-thinkers. Swift.

DESPITE. n. f. [spijt, Dutch; dépit, Fr.]

1. Malice; anger; malignity; maliciousness; spleen; hatred.

Thou

Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee! Shakesp.
With men these considerations are usually the causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others;
but with God they pass for reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Spratt.

2. Defiance; un subdued opposition.

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;
'Til with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shakesp.

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame;
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shakesp.

Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryden.
I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.
Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore.

Thou, with rebel insolence, did'st dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And in despite, ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.
3. Act of malice; act of opposition.

His punishment, eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the most High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milton.

To DESPI'TE. v. a. [from the noun.] To vex; to offend; to disappoint; to give uneasiness
to.

Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night, fetting the town on fire, to despite Bacchus. Raleigh.
DESPI'TEFUL. adj. [despite and full.] Malicious; full of spleen; full of hate; malignant;
mischievous: used both of persons and things.

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakesp.

Preserve us from the hands of our despiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Mean while the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, was known In heav'n. Milton.

DESPI'TEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.] Maliciously; malignantly.

Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. Matthew, v. 44.

DESPI'TEFULNESS. n. f. [from despiteful.] Malice; hate; malignity.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness, and prove his patience. Wisd. ii. 19.

DESPI'TEOUS. adj. [from despite.] Malicious;
furious. A word now out of use.

The knight of the red-cross, with him he spy'd Spurring so hot with rage despiteous,
'Gan fairly couch his spear. Fairy Queen.

Turning despiteous torture out of door.
Shakesp.

DESPI'TEOUSLY. adv. [from despiteous.] In a furious manner: not in use.

The mortal steel despiteously entail'd,
Deep in their flesh, quite thro' the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their giamsbeux falls. Spenser.

To DESPOIL. v. a. [despolio, Lat.]
1. To rob; to deprive: with of.

Despoil'd of warlike arms, and known shield.
Spenser.

You are nobly born,
Despoil'd of your honour in your life. Shakesp.

He waits with hellish rancour imminent,
To intercept thy way, or fend thee back
Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of blis. Milton.

He, pale as death's despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryd.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,
Awaits: this day of all his honours gain'd
Despoils him, if thy succour opportune
Defends not the sad hour. Phillips.

2. To despoil by any accident.

These formed stones despoil'd of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time moulder away. Woodward.

act of despoiling or stripping.

To DESPO'ND. v. a. [despondeo, Latin.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling,
and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which Providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of Heaven with trust and resignation. L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane:
The learned leaches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities. Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terri-fy the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind. Watts.

DESPO'NDENCY. n. f. [from despondent.] Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPO'NDENT. adj. [despondens, Lat.] Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surprized with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent
wretches in the world. Bentley.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, fit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock. Thomson.

To DESPO'NSATE. v. a. [desponso, Lat.] To cian prince, as, the despot of Servia.

DESPOTICAL. adj. [from despot.] Absolute DESSPO'TICK. } in power; unlimited in authority; arbitrary; unaccountable.

God's universal law
Gave to the man despotic power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lowre. Milton.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power: it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coercive and despotic. South.

We may fee in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotic prince, for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swis and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotic slavery. Swift.

DESPOTICALNESS. n. f. [from despotic.] Absolute authority.

DESPOTISM. n. f. [despotisme, Fr. from despot.]

gery.

DESSERT. n. f. [desserte, French.] The last course at an entertainment; the fruit or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art
To make a supper with a fine dessert. Dryden.

At your dessert bright pewter comes too late,
When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. King.

To DE'STINATE. v. a. [destino, Lat.] To design for any particular end or purpose.

Birds are destinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Ray on the Creation.

DESTINATION. n. f. [from destinate.] The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way. Glasseville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale.

To DE'STINE. v. a. [destino, Lat.]

1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?
Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,
Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe:
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more? Milton.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,
Drench'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice. Dryd.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.

Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destin'd to carry humours secreted from the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r,
From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour. Prior.

DE'STINY. n. f. [destinée, Fr.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy fire or dam;
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided. Shakesp.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is ty'd to Jove's eternal feat? Fairy Queen.

How can hearts, not free, be try'd whether they serve Willing or no, who will but what they must
By destiny, and can no other chuse? Milton.

Had thy great destiny but given thee skill
To know, as well as pow'r to act, her will. Denham.

Chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be. Dryden.

3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Acheron Meet me i' th' morning: thither he Will come to know his destiny. Shakesp.

DESTITUTE. adj. [desinitus, Lat.]

1. Forfaken; abandoned: with of.

To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into

2. Abject; friendless.

He will regard the prayer of the despise, and not despise their prayer. Psal. ciii. 17.

3. In want of.

Take the despise'd way

To find the regions despise of day. Dryden.

Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, despise of inhabitants. Addison.

DESTITUTE. n. f. [from despise.] Want; the state in which something is wanted; applied to persons.

That despise in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, 'till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care. Hooker.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great despise, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in despise or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor, the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship. Taylor.

To DESTROY. v. a. [despise, Lat. despise, French.]

'Tis safer to be that which we despise,

Than by despise dwell in doubtful joy. Shakespeare.

The wise Providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their despise, though they use them not as food; as the peacock *despise*s snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies despise spiders. Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons despise their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.

There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which *despise*s the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTROYER. n. f. [from despise.] The person that *despise*s or lays waste; a murderer.

It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the *despise*r was an Assyrian. Raleigh.

Triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
*Despise*r's rightlier call'd, and slayers of men. Milton.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright *despise*r lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives. Pope.

DETERGENT. n. f. An application that has the power of cleansing wounds.

We frequently see simple ulcers afflicted with sharp humours, which corrode them, and render them painful forid ulcers, if not timely relieved by detergents and lenients. Wifeman.

TO DETEST. v. a. [detestor, Latin.] To hate;
to abhor; to abominate.

Nigh thereto the ever-damned beast
Durst not approach; for he was deadly made,
And all that life preserved did detest. Fairy Queen.
Glory grows guilty of detested crimes,
When for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part,
We bend to that the working of the heart.

I've liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. Shakespeare.

There is that naturally in the heart of man which abhors sin as sin, and consequently would make him detest it both in himself and others too.

Who dares think one thing, and another tell,
My heart detests him as the gates of hell. Pope.

DETESTABLE. adj. [from detest.] Hateful; abhorred; abominable; odious.

Beguil'd, divorc'd, wrong'd, spighted, slain!
Most detestable death. Shakespeare.

He desired him to consider that both armies consisted of Christians, to whom nothing is more detestable than effusion of human blood. Hayward.

DETESTABLY. adv. [from detestable.] Hatefully;
abominably; odiously.

It stands here stigmatized by the apostle as a temper of mind, rendering men so detestably bad, that the great enemy of mankind neither can nor desires to make them worse. South.

DETESTATION. n. f. [from detest.]
1. Hatred; abhorrence; abomination.

Then only did misfortune make her see what she had done, especially finding in us rather detesta-tion than pity. Sidney.

2. It is sometimes used with for; but of seems more proper.

The detestation you can express
For vice in all its glittering drefs. Swift.

Our love of God will inspire us with a detesta-tion for sin, as that is of all things most contrary to his divine nature. Swift.

DETESTER. n. f. [from detest.] One that hates or abhors.

TO DETRONE. v. a. [de-troner, Fr. de and thronus, Latin.] To divest of regality; to throw down from the throne; to deprive of regal dignity.

DETINUE. n. f. [detinue, French.] A writ that lies against him, who, having goods or chattels delivered him to keep, refuses to deliver them again.

DETONATION. n. f. [detono, Latin.] Somewhat more forcible than the ordinary crackling of salts in calcination; as in the going off of the pulvis or a grum fulminans, or the like. It is also used so that noise which happens upon the mixture of fluids that ferment with violence; as oil of turpentine with oil of vitriol, resembling the explosion of gunpowder. Quincy.

A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, 'till the detonation occasioned by the former be either quite or almost altogether ended; unless it chance that the puffing matter do blow the coal too soon out of the crucible. Boyle.

TO DETONIZE. v. a. [from detono, Latin.] To calcine with detonation. A chemical term.

Nineteen parts in twenty of detonized nitre is destroyed in eighteen days. Arbutnot on Air.

TO DETORT. v. a. [detortus, of detorqueo, Latin.]
To wrest from the original import, meaning, or design.

They have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit, and have detorted texts of scripture to the sedition, disturbance, and destruction of the civil government. Dryden.

TO DETRACT. v. a. [detrahim, Latin; detrac-ter, French.]

1. To derogate; to take away by envy, calumny, or censure, any thing from the reputation of another; with from.

Those were assistants in private, but not trusted to manage the affairs in public; for that would detract from the honour of the principal ambassador. Bacon.

No envy can detract from this: it will shine in history, and, like swans, grow whiter the longer it endures. Dryden.

2. To take away; to withdraw.

By the largeness of the cornices they hinder both the light within, and likewise detract much from the view of the front without. Watson.

The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Boyle.

DETRACTER. n. f. [from detract.] One that takes away another's reputation; one that impairs the honour of another injuriously.

I am right glad to be thus satisfied, in that I yet was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their flanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

Whether we are so entirely sure of their loyalty upon the present foot of government as you may imagine, their detractors make a question.

Away the fair detractors went,
And gave by turns their censures vent. Swift.

DETRACTIION. n. f. [detractio, Latin; detraction, French.]

Detraction, in the native importance of the word, signifies the withdrawing or taking off from a thing; and, as it is applied to the reputation, it denotes the impairing or lessening a man in point of fame, rendering him less valued and esteemed by others, which is the final aim of detraction. Ayliffe.

I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakespeare.

Fame, that her high birth to raise,
Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse,
We may justly now accuse

Of detraction from her praise. Milton.
If detraction could invite us, discretion surely would contain us from any derogatory intention. Brown.

To put a stop to the insults and detractions of vain men, I resolved to enter into the examination. Woodward.

To consider an author as the subject of obloquy and detraction, we may observe with what pleasure a work is received by the invidious part of mankind, in which a writer falls short of himself.

DETRACTORY. adj. [from detract.] Defamatory by denial of desert; derogatory. Sometimes with to, properly from.

This is not only derogatory unto the wisdom of God, who hath proposed the world unto our knowledge, and thereby the notion of himself, but also detractory unto the intellect and sense of man, expressedly disposed for that inquisition. Broton.

In mentioning the joys of heaven, I use the expressions I find less detractory from a theme above our praises. Boyle.

The detractory lye takes from a great man the reputation that justly belongs to him. Arbutnot.

DETRACTRESS. n. f. [from detract.] A censorious woman.

If any shall detract from a lady's character, unless she be absent, the said detractors shall be forthwith ordered to the lowest place of the room. Addison.

DETRIMENT. n. f. [detrimētum, Latin.]
Loss; damage; mischief; diminution; harm.

Difficult it must be for one Christian church to abolish that which all had received and held for the space of many ages, and that without any detriment unto religion. Hooker.

I can repair
That detriment, if such it be, to lose.

Self-lost. Milton.

If your joint pow'r prevail, th' affairs of hell
No detriment need fear: go and be strong. Milton.

There often falls out so many things to be done on the sudden, that some of them must of necessity be neglected for that whole year, which is the greatest detriment to this whole mystery. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Let a family burn but a candle a night less than the usual number, and they may take in the Spectator without detriment to their private affairs.

DETRIMENTAL. adj. [from detriment.] Michievous; harmful; causing loss.

Among all honorary rewards, which are neither dangerous nor detrimental to the donor, I remember none so remarkable as the titles which are bestowed by the emperor of China: these are never given to any subject 'till the subject is dead.

Obstinacy in prejudices, which are detrimental to our country, ought not to be mistaken for virtuous resolution and firmness of mind. Addison.

DETRITION. n. f. [detritio, Latin.] The act of wearing away. Dict.

TO DETRUDE. v. a. [detrudo, Lat.] To thrust down; to force into a lower place.

Such as are detrudd down to hell,
Either, for shame, they still themselves retire;

Or, ty'd in chains, they in close prison dwell. Davies.

Philosophers are of opinion, that the souls of men may, for their miscarriages, be detrudd into the bodies of beasts. Locke.

At thy command the vernal sun awakes
The torpid sap, detrudd to the root

By wintry winds. Thomson.

TO DETRUNCATE. v. a. [detrunco, Lat.] To lop; to cut; to shorten by deprivation of parts.

DETRUNCATION. n. f. [from detruncate.] The act of lopping or cutting.

DETRUSION. n. f. [from detrusio, Latin.] The act of thrusting or forcing down.

From this detrusion of the waters towards the side, the parts towards the pole must be much increased. Keil against Burnet.

DETURBATION. n. f. [deturbo, Latin.] The act of throwing down; degradation. Dict.

DEVASTATION. n. f. [devasto, Latin.] Waste;
havock; desolation; destruction.

By devastation the rough warrior gains,
And farmers fatten most when famine reigns.

That flood which overflowed Attica in the days of Ogyges, and that which drowned Theffaly in Deucaion's time, made cruel havock and devastation among them. Woodward.

DUCE. n. f. [dux, French.]

1. Two: a word used in games.

You are a gentleman and a gamester; then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of duce amounts to. Shakespeare.

2. The Devil. See DEUSE.

TO DEVELOP. v. a. [develop, French.] To disengage from something that enfold and conceals; to disentangle; to clear from its covering.

DEV

Take him to develop, if you can,
And hew the block off, and get out the man.

DEV'RGENCE. n. f. [devergentia, Latin.] Declivity; declination.
To DEV'EST. v. a. [devesler, French; de and estis, Latin.]

1. To strip; to deprive of cloaths.
Friends all but now,
In quarter and in terms like bride and groom,
Dressing them for bed.
Then of his arms Androgeus he devests,
His sword, his shield he takes, and plumed crests.

2. To annul; to take away any thing good.
What are those breaches of the law of nature and nations, which do forfeit and devest all right and title in a nation to government?

3. To free from any thing bad.
Come on thou little inmate of this breast,
Which for thy fake from passions I devest.
DEV'X. adj. [devexus, Latin.] Bending down;
declivous; incurvated downwards.

DEV'XITY. n. f. [from devex.] Incurvation downwards; declivity.

To DEV'VIATE. v. n. [de via decedere, Lat.]

1. To wander from the right or common way.
The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense.

Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track.
What makes all physical and moral ill?
There nature deviates, and here wanders will.

Besides places which may deviate from the sense of the author, it would be kind to observe any deficiencies in the diction.

2. To go astray; to err; to sin; to offend.

DEV'ATION. n. f. [from deviate.]

1. The act of quitting the right way; error;
wandering.

These bodies constantly move round in the same tracts without making the least deviation.

2. Variation from established rule.

Having once surveyed the true and proper natural alphabet, we may easily discover the deviations from it, in all the alphabets in use, either by defect of single characters, of letters, or by confusion of them.

3. Offence; obliquity of conduct.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground, that they may not bring error into habit.

DEV'CE. n. f. [devise, French; devisa, Italian.]

1. A contrivance; a stratagem.

This is our devise,

That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us.

He intended it as a politick devise to lessen their interest, and keep them low in the world.

2. A design; a scheme formed; project; speculation.

Touching the exchange of laws in practice with laws in devise, which they say are better for the state of the church, if they might take place: the farther we examine them, the greater cause we find to conclude, although we continue the same we are, the harm is not great.

His devise is against Babylon, to destroy it.

There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless,
the counsel of the Lord shall stand.

3. The emblem on a shield; the ensign armorial of a nation or family.

Then change we shields, and thir devices bear;
Let fraud supply the want of force in war.

Hibernia's harp, devise of her command,
And parent of her mirth, shall there be seen.

They intend to let the world see what party they are of, by figures and designs upon these

DEV

fans; as the knights-errant used to distinguish themselves by devices on their shields.

4. Invention; genius.

He's gentle; never schooled, and yet learned;
full of noble device, of all sorts enchantingly beloved.

DEV'IL. n. f. [diopul, Saxon; diabolus, Latin.]

It were more properly written devil.]

1. A fallen angel; the tempter and spiritual enemy of mankind.

Are you a man?

—Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.

2. A wicked man or woman.

See thyself, devil!

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman.

3. A ludicrous term for mischief.

A war of profit mitigates the evil;
But to be tax'd, and beaten, is the devil.

4. A kind of expletive, expressing wonder or vexation.

The things, we know, are neither rich nor rare;

But wonder how the devil they got there!

5. A kind of ludicrous negative in an adverbial sense.

The devil was well, the devil a monk was he.

DEV'ILISH. adj. [from devil.]

1. Partaking of the qualities of the devil; diabolical; mischievous; malicious; destructive.

Gynecia mistrusted greatly Cecropia, because she had heard much of the devilish wickedness of her heart.

For grief thereof, and devilish despight,
From his infernal furnaces forth he threw Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light,

Enroll'd in dusky smoke and brimstone blue.

He trains his devilish engin'ry, impal'd
On ev'ry side with shadowy squadrons deep.

2. Having communication with the devil.

The duchess, by his subordination,
Upon my life began her devilish practices.

3. An epithet of abhorrence or contempt.

A devilish knave! besides the knave is handsome, young, and blyth: all those requisites are in him that delight.

4. Excessive: in a ludicrous sense.

Thy hair and beard are of a different die,
Short of a foot, distorted of an eye,
With all these tokens of a knave complete,
If thou art honest, thou'rt a devilish cheat.

DEV'ILISHLY. adv. [from devilish.] In a manner suiting the devil; diabolically.

Those trumpeters threatened them with continual alarms of damnation, if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that which wickedly and devilishly those impostors called the cause of God.

DEV'ILKIN. n. f. [from devil.] A little devil.

DEVIOUS. adj. [devius, Lat.]

1. Out of the common track.

Creusa kept behind: by choice we stray
Through ev'ry dark and ev'ry devious way.

In this minute devious subject I have been necessitated to explain myself in more words than may seem needful.

2. Wandering; roving; rambling.

Every muse,
And every blooming pleasure, wait without
To bless the wildly devious morning walk.

3. Erring; going astray from rectitude.

One devious step, at first setting out, frequently leads a person into a wilderness of doubt and error.

Some lower muse, perhaps, who lightly treads
The devious paths where wanton fancy leads.

4. It is used likewise of persons. Roving; idly vagrant; erring from the way.

DEV

To DEVISE. v. n. [deviser, French, as of devisare, to look about. Skinner.]

1. To contrive; to form by art; to invent; to excogitate; to strike out by thought.

Whether they, at their first coming into the land, or afterwards, by trading with other nations which had letters, learned them of them, or devised them among themselves, is very doubtful.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

He could by his skill draw after him the weight of five thousand bushels of grain, and devise those rare engines which shot small stones at hand, but great ones afar off.

Ye sons of art, one curious piece devise,
From whose constructure motion shall arise.

2. To plan; to scheme.

Behold I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you.

To DEVISE. v. n. To consider; to contrive; to lay plans; to form schemes: anciently with
of.

Her merry fit she freshly 'gan to rear,
And did of joy and jollity devise,
Herself to cherish and her guest to cheer.

But sith now safe ye seized have the shore,
And well arrived are, high God be blest,
Let us devise of ease and everlasting rest.

Since we are so far entered, let us, I pray you,
a little devise of those evils by which that country is held in this wretched case, that it cannot, as you say, be recured.

Devise but how you'll use him when he comes,
and let us two devise to bring him thither.

DEVISE. n. f. [devise, a will, old French.]

1. The act of giving or bequeathing by will.

This word is properly attributed, in our common law, to him that bequeaths his goods by his last will or testament in writing; and the reason is, because those that now appertain only to the deviseur, by this act are distributed into many parts.

The alienation is made by devise in a last will only, and the third part of these profits is there demandable.

2. Contrivance. See DEVISE.

God hath omitted nothing needful to his purpose, nor left his intention to be accomplished by our devices.

To DEVISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To grant
by will. A law term.

DEVISEE. n. f. He to whom something is bequeathed by will.

DEVISER. n. f. [from devise.] A contriver;
an inventor.

Being divided from truth in themselves, they are yet farther removed by advenient deception; for true it is, if I say they are daily mocked into error by devisers.

The authors of useful inventions, the devisers of wholesome laws, as were the philosophers of ancient times, were honoured as the fathers and prophets of their country.

DEVISOUR. n. f. He that gives by will. See DEVISE.

DEV'ITABLE. adj. [devitabilis, Lat.] Possible to be avoided; avoidable.

DEV'ITATION. n. f. [devitatio, Latin.] The act of escaping or avoiding.

DEV'OID. adj. [void, French.]

1. Empty; vacant; void.

When I awoke and found her place devoid,
And nought but pressed grafs where she had lyen,
I sorrow'd all so much as earst I joy'd.

2. Without any thing, whether good or evil;
free from; in want of.

He flung it from him, and devoid of dread,
Upon him lightly leaped without heed.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with proper locality, is generally opinioned.

DEV

The motion of this chariot will be still easier as it ascends higher, 'till at length it shall become utterly devoid of gravity, when the least strength will be able to bestow upon it a swift motion.

Wilkins's Mark. Magic.

His warlike mind, his soul devoid of fear,
His high designing thoughts were figur'd there,
As when, by magick, ghosts are made appear.

Dryden.

We Tyrians are not so devoid of sense,
Nor so remote from Phœbus' influence.

Dryden.

DEVOIR. n. f. [devoir, French.]

1. Service. A sense now not used.

To restore again the kingdom of the Mamalukes,
he offered him their utmost devoir and service.

Knolles.

2. Act of civility or obsequiousness.

Through splendid kingdoms he devolves his maze,
Now wanders wild through solitary tracks
Of life deserted sand.

Thomson.

2. To move from one hand to another.

Upon the duke of Ormond, the king had wholly devolved the care and disposition of all affairs in Ireland.

Temple.

Because they found too much confusion in such a multitude of statesmen, they devolved their whole authority into the hands of the council of sixty.

Addison.

The whole power, at home and abroad, was de- volved upon that family.

Swift.

The matter which devolves from the hills down upon the lower grounds, does not considerably raise and augment them.

Woodward.

To DEVOLVE. v. n.

1. To roll down.

2. To fall in succession into new hands.

Supposing people, by wanting spiritual blessings, did lose all their right to temporal, yet that forfeiture must devolve only to the supreme Lord.

Decay of Piety.

DEVOLUTION. n. f. [devolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of rolling down.

The raising of new mountains, deterrations, or the devolution of earth down upon the valleys from the hills and high grounds, will fall under our consideration.

Woodward.

2. Removal successive from hand to hand.

The jurisdiction exercised in those courts is de- volved from the crown of England, and the last de- volution is to the king by way of appeal.

Hale.

DEVORATION. n. f. [from devoro, Latin.] The act of devouring.

Diſ.

To DEVOUR. v. a. [devorare, Latin.]

1. To dedicate; to consecrate; to appropriate by vow.

No devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the Lord, of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed.

Lev. xxvii. 21.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Shakespeare.

They, impious, dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day.

Pope.

2. To addict; as to a sect, or study.

While we do admire

This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoicks, nor no stocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's checks,

As Ovid be an outcast quite abjur'd.

Shakespeare.

If persons of this make should ever devote themselves to science, they should be well assured of a solid and strong constitution of body.

Watts.

3. To condemn; to resign to ill.

Aliens were devoted to their rapine and despoil.

Decay of Piety.

Ah why, Penelope, this causeless fear,
To render sleep's soft blessings insincere!

Alike devote to sorrow's dire extreme,
The day reflection, and the midnight dream.

Pope.

4. To addict; to give up to ill.

DEV

The Romans having once debauched their senses with the pleasures of other nations, they devoted themselves unto all wickedness.

Grew.

5. To curse; to execrate; to doom to destruction.

I fly

Those wicked tents devoted; left the wrath
Impendent, raging into sudden flame, Distinguish not.

Milton.

To destruction sacred, and devote,
He with his whole posterity must die.

Milton.

Goddeſs of maids, and conscious of our hearts,
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,

When, hisſing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt.

Dryden.

Let her, like me, of ev'ry joy forlorn,
Devote the hour when such a wretch was born:

Like me to deserts and to darkness run.

Rowe.

DEVOTE. adj. For devoted.

How on a sudden lost,
Defac'd, deflower'd, and now to death devote!

Milton.

DEVOTEDNESS. n. f. [from devote.] The state of being devoted or dedicated; consecration: ad-dictedness.

Whatever may fall from my pen to her disad-vantage, relates to her but as she was, or may again be, an obstacle to your devotedness to seraphick love.

Boyle.

The owning of our obligation unto virtue, may be styl'd natural religion; that is to say, a devo- tedness unto God, so as to act according to his will.

Grew.

DEVOTEE. n. f. [devot, French.] One erroneously or superstitiously religious; a bigot.

DEVOTION. n. f. [devotion, French; devotio,
Latin.]

1. The state of being consecrated or dedicated.

2. Piety; acts of religion; devoutness.

Mean time her warlike brother on the seas
His waving streamers to the winds displays,
And vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays

Dryden.

3. An act of external worship.

Religious minds are inflamed with the love of publick devotion.

Hooker.

For as I pass'd by and beheld your devotion, I found an altar with this inscription, To the unknown God.

In vain doth man the name of just expect,
If his devotions he to God neglect.

Denham.

4. Prayer; expression of devotion.

An aged holy man,
That day and night said his devotion,
No other worldly business did apply.

Fairy Queen.

Your devotion has its opportunity: we must pray always, but chiefly at certain times.

Spratt.

5. The state of the mind under a strong sense of dependance upon God; devoutness; piety.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good
Descends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes
Directed in devotion, to adore

Milton.

And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works.

From the full choir, when loud Hosannas rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice:

Amid' that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,

One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of publick or private prayers at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises.

Law on Christi's Perfection.

6. An act of reverence, respect, or ceremony.

Whither away so fast?
—Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.

Shakespeare.

7. Strong affection; ardent love; such as makes the lover the sole property of the person loved.

Be opposite all planets of good luck,
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter.

Shakespeare.

DEV

He had a particular reverence for the person of

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate, by a few demure looks, with some devotional postures and grimaces.

South.

DEVOTIONALIST. n. f. [from devotion.] A man zealous without knowledge; superstitiously de- vout.

To DEVOUR. v. a. [devoro, Latin.]

1. To eat up ravenously, as a wild beast or animal of prey.

We will say some evil beast hath devoured him.

Genesis.

We've willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd.

Shakespeare.

So looks the pent up lion o'er the wretch
That tremblings under his devouring paws.

Shakespeare.

2. To destroy or consume with rapidity and violence.

A fire devoured before them, and behind them a flame burneth.

Isa. ii. 3.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd;

Dryden.

It was the waste of war.
Notwithstanding that Socrates lived in the time of this devouring pestilence at Athens, he never caught the least infection.

Addison.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.

He seem'd in swiftness to devour the way.

Shakespeare.

Such a pleasure as grows fresher upon enjoyment; and though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured.

South.

Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour
Does some loose remnant of thy life devour.

Dryden.

4. To enjoy with avidity.

Longing they look, and gaping at the fight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight.

Dryden.

DEVOURER. n. f. [from devour.] A consumer;
he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tigers:
Tigers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou then,
From these devourers to be banish'd?

Shakespeare.

Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds to violence.

Decay of Piety.

Carp and tench do best together, all other fish being devourers of their spawn.

Mortimer.

DEVOUT. adj. [devotus, Latin.]

1. Pious; religious; devoted to holy duties.

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour.

Rogers.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god;
And, of success secure, return'd to his abode.

Dryden.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark
The ancient fire descends, with all his train:
Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,
Grateful to heav'n.

Milton.

DEVOUTLY. adv. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Heb

DEW

Her grace rose, and with modest pace Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and faint-
like,
Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.

One of the wise men having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day,
She dreamt deuillier than most use to pray.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,
How, with affrighted eyes,
Thou saw'st the wide extended deep
In all its horrors rise!
To second causes we seem to trust, expressing, so devoutly as we ought to do, our dependance on the first.

DEUSE. n. f. [more properly than deuce, Junius, from Dusus, the name of a certain species of evil spirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the prettiest prologue, as he wrote it;
Well, the deuce take me if I ha'n't forgot it.

DEUTERO'GAMY. n. f. [deuteros and gamy.]
A second marriage.

DEUTERONOMY. n. f. [deuteros and nomos.] The second book of the law; the fifth book of Moses.

DEUTEROSCOPY. n. f. [deuteros and scopia.]
The second intention: the meaning beyond the literal sense: not in use.

Not attaining the deuteroscopy, or second intention of the words, they are faint to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies.

DEW. n. f. [beap, Saxon: dawu, Dutch.] The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not discernible: the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air 'till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his tim'rous dreams was still awak'd.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moist vapours condensed.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew.

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
A dainty dew, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dewed been with timely rain.

With him pour we in our country's purge,
Each drop of us.

—Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.

Give me thy hand,

That I may dew it with my mournful tears.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy
Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words, which these he breath'd.

DEW

Palemon above the rest appears,
In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears.

In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking sword, and strows the ground
With headless ranks.

DEWBERRY. n. f. [from dew and berry.]
Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean raf-berries, which are also of the bramble kind.

Feed him with apriocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.

DEWBESPRESSANT. part. [dew and bessprent.]
Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by then the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the favours herb
Of knot-grass dewbessprent, and were in fold,
I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.]
The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

He, now to prove his late renewed might,
High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so fore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made.

DEWDROP. n. f. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sun rise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

AN HOST
Innumerable! as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on every leaf, and ev'ry flower.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on the flow'ry lawns,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns!

DE'WLAP. n. f. [from lapping or licking the dew.]
1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rowles of fat about his shoulders slung,
And from his neck the double dewlap hung.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale.

DE'WLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furnished with dewlaps.

Who would believe, that there were mountaineers
Dewlaps like bulls, whose throats had hanging at em

Wallets of flesh.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein.

DE'WORM. n. f. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew worm, which some call the lob-worm, and the brandling, are the chief.

DE'WY. adj. [from dew.]
1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine
Roars stormy,

2. Moist with dew; roscid.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone, 'gan herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such comfort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep.

DIA

His dewy locks distill'd Ambrosia.

Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,
The rocks of Hernicus and dewy fields.

DEXTER. adj. [Latin.] The right; not the left. A term used in heraldry.

My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my fire's.

DEXTERITY. n. f. [dexteritas, Lat.]
1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, when they press'd him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]
1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready: as, a dexterous workman.

For both their dextrous hands the lance could wield.

2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.

They confine themselves, and are dextrous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner, with which they content themselves.

DEXTEROUSLY. adv. [from dextrous.] Expertly; skilfully; artfully.

The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dexterously, but by acting the minister.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dexterously to throw the lucky fice.

DEXTRAL. adj. [dexter, Latin.] The right; not the left.

As for any tunicles or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels.

DEXTRALITY. n. f. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differentiated by dextrality.

DIABETES. n. f. [diabētēs, Gr.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consump-tions.

DIABOLICAL. adj. [from diabolus, Latin.] De-diabolick. Vilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious;
pertaining to the devil.

This, in other beasts observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute.

Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature?

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children.

Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage; and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery.

DIACODIUM. n. f. [diacodium, Gr.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACOSTICS. n. f. [diacostica, Gr.] The doctrine of sounds.

DIADEM. n. f. [diadema, Latin.]

DIA

1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.

The sacred diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe gored with many a wound.

Spenser,

A lift the cobblers' temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them.

Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,

Golden in shew, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,

To him who wears the regal diadem.

Milton.

Why should he ravish then that diadem
From your grey temples, which the hand of time Must shortly plant on his?

Denham.

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And stopp'd our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a mist before this radiant day.

Rochester.

DIADÉMED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,

Her priestless muse forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of eternity.

Pope.

DIADROM. n. f. [διαδρομή.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of one inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute.

Locke.

DIARRESIS. n. f. [διαρρησις.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as ac'er.

DIAGNOSTICK. n. f. [διαγνωστικόν.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house: — let us hear your diagnosticks.

Collier on Pride.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monstrosity of the badger is ill-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All sorts of stone composed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata.

Woodward.

DIA'GONAL. n. f. [from the adjective.] A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts.

Locke.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptation, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished, according unto their activity and predominant loco-motion, on the either side.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIAGRAM. n. f. [διαγράμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematics; very speccious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanical operation.

Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles?

Bentley.

DIAGRYDIATES. n. f. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder.

Floyer.

DIAL. n. f. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shews the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:
To spend that shortness basely were too long,
Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more than that it is gone.

Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE. n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four-and-twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate.

Addison's Spectator.

DIALECT. n. f. [διαλεκτική.] 1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.

2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting.

Hooker.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person upon whom it was conferred, to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations?

South.

DIALECTICAL. adj. [from dialectic.] Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties that the schoolmen employ about physiological mysteries, more declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth.

Boyle.

DIALECTICK. n. f. [διαλεκτική.] Logic; the art of reasoning.

DIALLING. n. f. [from dial.] The sciaterick science; the knowledge of shadow; the art of constructing dials on which the shadow may shew the hour.

DIALIST. n. f. [from dial.] A constructor of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes.

Moxon.

DIALOGIST. n. f. [from dialogue.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.

DIALOGUE. n. f. [διαλογος.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckoo?

Shakespeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked sex! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise;
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise.

Dryden.

To DIALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To discourse with another; to confer.

Do'st dialogue with thy shadow? Shakespeare's Timon.

DIA

DIA

DIALYSIS. n. f. [διάλυσις.] The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.

DIA'METER. n. f. [διά and μέτρον.] The line which passing through the center of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles.

Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter.

Addison on Italy.

DIA'METRICAL. adj. [from diameter.] Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIA'METRALLY. adv. [from diameter.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct opposition.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposed to profaneness and impiety of actions.

Hammond.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.] 1. Describing a diameter.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The fin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diameter.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security.

Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it.

Woodward.

DIAMOND. n. f. [diamant, French; adamant, Latin.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendour, and the brightness of its reflections. It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty-four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fiercest of all fires does it no injury, unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass-house fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brasils; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles.

Hill on Fossils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promised.

Shakespeare.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched bent of the brow.

Shakespeare.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty; as also in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable than any other stone.

Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the star that utters in the morn.

Blackmore.

The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,
Collected light, compact.

Thomson.

DIAPASE. n. f. [διάπασον.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

And

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the base,
Proportion'd equally by seven and nine;
Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapase. Spenser.
The sweet numbers and melodious measures,
With which I wont the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapase of pleasures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenser.

DIAPASON. n. f. [dia-pa-sion.] Spenser.
Diapason denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the same with that we call an eighth, or an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first. Harris.

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapasons, which is the return of the same found. Bacon.

Harsh din
Broke the fair musick that all creatures made To their great Lord, whose love their motion fway'd

In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good. Milton.

Many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapason swallows all. Crawshaw.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DIAPER. n. f. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the finest species of figured linen after damask.

Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft filken twine;

Nor any weaver, which his work doth boast
In diaper, in damask, or in lyne,

Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious net-work to compare. Spenser.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a silver basin
Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;

Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shakespeare.

To DIAPER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,

The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd like the discoloured mead. Spenser.

Flora useth to cloath our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diapered with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. To draw flowers upon cloaths.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen. Peacham on Drawing.

DIAPHANEITY. n. f. [from diaphaneia.] Transparency; pellucidness; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and lose their diaphaneity;

therefore are the eyelids so contrived as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain. Ray.

DIAPHANICK. adj. [dia and phanos.] Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior, and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtle, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light, afterwards created, easily transpired. Raleigh.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [dia and phanos.] Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent, or cleaving to a diaphanous body. Raleigh.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray.

DIAPHORETICK. adj. [diaphoreticus.] Sudori-fick; promoting a diaphoresis or perspiration;
causing sweat.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a sudorifick, is something that will provoke sweating. Watts.

Diaphoreticks, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of digestion, because the attenuation of the aliment makes it perspirable. Arbutnot.

DIAPHRAGM. n. f. [diaphragma.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

2. Any division or partition which divides a hollow body.

It consists of a fasciculus of bodies, round, about one sixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and parted into numerous cells by means of diaphragms, thick set throughout the whole length of the body. Woodward on Fossils.

DIARRHŒA. n. f. [diarrhœa.] A flux on the belly, whereby a person frequently goes to stool, and is cured either by purging off the cause, or restringing the bowels. Quincy.

During his diarrhœa I healed up the fontanel. Wifeman.

DIARRHŒICK. adj. [from diarrhœa.] Promoting the flux of the belly; solvent; purgative.

Millet is diarrhœick, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbutnot.

DIARY. n. f. [diarium, Lat.] An account of the transactions, accidents, and observations of every day; a journal.

In sea-voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men make diaries; but in land-travel, wherein so much is to be observed, they omit it. Bacon.

I go on in my intended diary. Tatler.

DIASTOLE. n. f. [diastole.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, by which a short syllable is made long.

2. The dilation of the heart.

The systole seems to resemble the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural state. Ray on the Creation.

DIASTYLE. [dia and styla.] a pillar.] A fort of edifice where the pillars stand at such a distance from one another, that three diameters of their thickness are allowed for intercolumniation. Harris.

DIATESSERON. n. f. [di and τέσσαρες, four.]
An interval in musick, composed of one greater tone, one lesser, and one greater semi-tone; its proportion being as four to three. It is called, in musical composition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATONICK. adj. [di and τῶν.] The ordinary sort of musick which proceeds by different tones, either in ascending or descending. It contains only the two greater and lesser tones, and the greater semi-tone. Harris.

DIAZEUTICK Tone. adj. [di and ζεύω.] In the ancient Greek musick, disjoined two-fourths, one on each side of it; and which being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our musick, from A to B.

They allowed to this diazeutick tone, which is our La, Mi, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unalterable difference of the fifth and fourth. Harris.

DIABLE. n. f. [from dipfel, Dutch, a sharp point, Skinner; from dabble, Junius.] A small spade; a pointed instrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

Through cunning, with dibble, rake, mattock,
and spade,

By line and by level trim garden is made. Tusser's Husbandry.

DIESTONE. n. f. A little stone which children throw at another stone.

I have seen little girls exercise whole hours together, and take abundance of pains to be expert at dibstones. Locke.

DICACITY. n. f. [dicacitas, Lat.] Pertness;
sauciness.

DICE. n. f. The plural of die. See DIE.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice: now, after you have cast all the trials but one, it is still as much odds at the last remaining time, as it was at the first. Bentley.

To DICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; dined not above seven times a-week. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

DICE-BOX. n. f. [dice and box.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you say, should you see the sparkler shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a dice-box? Addison's Guardian.

DICER. n. f. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gamester.

They make marriage vows
As false as dicers' oaths. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DICH. adj. This word seems corrupted from dit for do it.

Rich men sin, and I eat root:
Much good dieb thy good heart, Apemantus. Shakespeare's Timon.

DICHOTOMY. n. f. [dyxomía.] Distribution of ideas by pairs.

Some persons have disturbed the order of nature, and abused their readers by an affectation of dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the subject, considered together with the design which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

DICKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it seems, much the same with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock?
I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

What a dickens does he mean by a trivial sum?
But han't you found it, fir? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

DICKER of Leather. n. f. [dicra, low Lat.] Ten hides. Ditt.

To DICTATE. v. a. [dicto, Lat.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And studded amber darts a golden ray;
Such, and not nobler, in the realms above,
My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove. Pope's Odyssey.

Whatsoever is dictated to us by God himself, or by men who are divinely inspired, must be believed with full assurance. Watts.

DICTATE. n. f. [dictatum, Lat.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; prescription; prescript.

Those right helps of art which will scarce be found by those who servilely confine themselves to the dictates of others. Locke.

I credit what the Grecian dictates say,
And Samian sounds o'er Scotia's hills convey. Prior.

Then let this dictate of my love prevail. Pope's Odyssey.

DICTATION. n. f. [from dictate.] The act or practice of dictating or prescribing. Ditt.

DICTATOR. n. f. [Lat.]

1. A magistrate of Rome made in times of exigence and distress, and invested with absolute authority.

Kind dictators made, when they came home,
Their vanquish'd foes free citizens of Rome. Waller.

Julius with honour tam'd Rome's foreign foes;
But patriots fell, ere the dictator rose. Prior.

2. One invested with absolute authority.

Unanimous they all commit the care,
And management of this main enterprise,
To him their great dictator. Milton.

3. One whose credit or authority enables him to direct the conduct or opinion of others.

Nor is it a small power it gives one man over
another,

another, to have the authority to be the dictator of principles, and teacher of unquestionable truths.

Locke.

That riches, honours, and outward splendour, should set up persons for dictators to all the rest of mankind, is a most shameful invasion of the right of our understanding.

Watts.

DICTATORIAL. adj. [from dictator.] Authoritative; confident; dogmatical; overbearing.

A young academick often dwells upon a journal, or an observator that treats of trade and politicks in a dictatorial style, and is lavish in the praise of the author.

Watts.

DICTATORSHIP. n. f. [from dictator.]

1. The office of dictator.

This is the solemnest title they can confer under the principedom, being indeed a kind of dictatorship.

Wotton.

Dryden.

DICTIONARY. n. f. [dictionarium, Lat.] A book containing the words of any language in alphabetical order; with explanations of their meaning; a lexicon; a vocabulary; a word-book.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and left an account that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations; that they are afraid of letters and characters, notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing; and not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Is it such a fault to translate simulacra images? I see what a good thing it is to have a good catholic dictionary.

Stillington.

An army, or a parliament, is a collection of men; a dictionary, or nomenclature, is a collection of words.

Watts.

DID. of do. [did, Saxon.]

1. The preterite of do.

Thou canst not say I did it.

Shakespeare.

What did that greatness in a woman's mind?

Ill lodg'd and weak to act what it design'd.

Dryden.

2. The sign of the preter-imperfect tense, or perfect.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand,

Or rail at arts he did not understand?

Dryden.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically; as, I did really love him.

DIDACTICAL. adj. [didacticus, Gr.] Preceptive; DIDACTIC. s. giving precepts; as a didactic poem is a poem that gives rules for some art; as the Georgicks.

The means used to this purpose are partly didactical, and partly protreptical, demonstrating the truth of the gospel; and then urging the professors of those truths to be steadfast in the faith, and to beware of infidelity.

Ward on Infidelity.

DIDAPPER. n. f. [from dip.] A bird that dives into the water.

DIDASCALICK. adj. [didascalicus, Gr.] Preceptive; didactic; giving precepts in some art.

I found it necessary to form some story, and give a kind of body to the poem: under what species it may be comprehended, whether didasclick or heroic, I leave to the judgment of the critics.

Prior.

TO DIDDLE. v. a. [didden, Teut. zittern, German.] To quake with cold; to shiver. A provincial word.

Skinners.

DIDST. The second person of the preter tense of do. See DID.

Oh last and best of Scots! who didst maintain

Thy country's freedom from a foreign reign.

Dryden.

DIDUCTION. n. f. [diductio, Latin.] Separation by withdrawing one part from the other.

He ought to shew what kind of strings they are,

which, though strongly fastened to the inside of the receiver and superficies of the bladder, must draw as forcibly one as another, in comparison of those that within the bladder draw so as to hinder the diduction of the fides.

Boyle.

TO DIE. v. a. [beag, Sax. a colour.] To tinge; to colour; to stain.

So much of death her thoughts

Had entertain'd, as dy'd her cheeks with pale.

Milton.

All white, a virgin faint she fought the skies; For marriage, though it fullies not, it dies.

Dryden.

DIE. n. f. [from the verb.] Colour; tincture; stain; hue acquired.

It will help me nothing

To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me, Which makes my whit'ft part black.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

We have dainty works of feathers of wonderful lustre, excellent dies, and many.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

Darkness we see emerges into light,

And shining suns descend to fable night:

Ev'n heav'n itself receives another die,

When weary'd animals in slumbers lie

Of midnight ease; another, when the grey

Of morn preludes the splendor of the day.

It is surprising to see the images of the mind

Stamped upon the aspect; to see the cheeks take the die of the passions, and appear in all the colours of thought.

Collier of the Aspect.

TO DIE. v. n. [dedian, Saxon.]

1. To lose life; to expire; to pass into another state of existence.

Thou dost kill me with thy falsehood; and it grieves me not to die, but it grieves me that thou art the murderer.

Sidney.

Nor did the third his conquests long survive,

Dying ere scarce he had begun to live.

Addison's Ovid.

Oh let me live my own, and die so too!

To live and die is all I have to do!

Denham.

2. To perish by violence or disease.

The dira only serv'd to confirm him in his first opinion, that it was his destiny to die in the ensuing combat.

Dryden.

Talk not of life or ransom, he replies,

Patroclus dead, whoever meets me, dies:

In vain a single Trojan fues for grace;

But least the fons of Priam's hateful race:

Die then, my friend! what boots it to deplore!

The great, the good Patroclus is no more!

He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die;

And thou, dost thou, bewail mortality?

Pope's Homer.

3. It has by before an instrument of death.

Their young men shall die by the sword; their fons and daughters shall die by famine.

Jerem.

4. Of before a disease.

They often come into the world clear, and with the appearance of sound bodies; which, notwithstanding, have been infected with disease, and have died of it, or at least have been very infirm.

Wijeman.

5. For commonly before a privative, and of before a positive cause: these prepositions are not always truly distinguished.

At first the startles, then she stands amaz'd;

At last with terror she from thence doth fly,

And loaths the wat'ry glafs wherein she gaz'd,

And thuns it still, although for thirst she die.

Davies.

He in the laden vineyard dies for thirst.

Addison.

Hipparchus being passionately fond of his own wife, who was enamoured of Bathyllus, leaped and died of his fall.

Addison.

6. To be punished with death.

If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

What is the love of our neighbour? —The valuing him as the image of God, one for whom Christ died.

Hammond.

7. To be lost; to perish; to come to nothing.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone? Of sorriest fancies your companion making,

Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

If any sovereignty, on account of his property, had been vested in Adam, which in truth there was not, it would have died with him.

Locke.

Whatever pleasure any man may take in spreading whiffers, he will find greater satisfaction by letting the secret die within his own breast.

Speſiator.

8. To sink; to faint.

His heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

Samuel.

9. [In theology.] To perish everlastingly. So long as God shall live, so long shall the damned die.

Hakewill on Providence.

10. To languish with pleasure or tenderness.

To founds of heav'nly harps the dies away,

And melts in visions of eternal day.

Pope.

11. To vanish.

This battle fares like to the morning's war,

When dying clouds contend with growing light.

Shakespeare.

The smaller stains and blemishes may die away and disappear, amidst the brightness that furrounds them; but a blot of a deeper nature casts a shade on all the other beauties, and darkens the whole character.

Addison's Speſiator.

12. [In the style of lovers.] To languish with affection.

The young men acknowledged in love-letters, that they died for Rebecca.

Taylor.

Time

D I E

Time may come, when men
With angels may participate; and find
No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare.

No part of diet, in any season, is so healthful, so natural, and so agreeable to the stomach, as good and well-ripened fruits.

Milk appears to be a proper diet for human bodies, where acrimony is to be purged or avoided; but not where the canals are obstructed, it being void of all saline quality.

Food regulated by the rules of medicine, for the prevention or cure of any disease.

I recommend rather some diet for certain seasons, than frequent use of physick; for those diets alter the body more, and trouble it less.

I refrained myself to so regular a diet, as to eat flesh but once a-day, and little at a time, without salt or vinegar.

Allowance of provision.

For his diet, there was a continual diet given him by the king.

To Diet. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed by the rules of medicine.
She diets him with fasting every day,
The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,
And made him pray both early and eke late.

Shew a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds sick of happiness,
And purge th' obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold; and then
We powt upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priestlike fasts; therefore I'll watch him

'Till he be dieted to my request.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness; for it is my office.
Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease,
'Till dieted by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leapt into my seat.

3. To board; to supply with diet.

To Diet. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.

I join with thee calm peace and quiet;
Spare fast, that oft with gods doth diet.
Diet-drink. n. f. [diet and drink.] Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.

The observation will do that better than the lady's diet-drinks, or apothecary's medicines.
Diet. n. f. [from dies, an appointed day, Skinner: from diet, an old German word signifying a multitude, Junius.] An assembly of princes or estates.

An emperor in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or assembly of the estates of many free princes, ecclesiastical and temporal.

Dietary. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet.

Dietter. n. f. [from diet.] One who prescribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He sauc'd our broth as Juno had been sick,
And he her dieter.

Dietetical. } n. f. [dietares.] Relating to diet.
Dietetic. } diet; belonging to the medicinal cautions about the use of food.

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and such as culinary prescription might have afforded.

D I F

This book of Cheyne's became the subject of conversation, and produced even sects in the dietetic philosophy.

To Differ. v. n. [differe, Latin.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have properties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing found from the same pipe dry.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, wont discern
What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute.

The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgment sit;
We'll never differ with a crowded pit.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments.

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations.

Difference. n. f. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue.

Thus born alike, from virtue first began
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood;
But that which made him noble, made him good.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes, under every such difference.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.
Oh the strange difference of man and man!
To thee a woman's services are due;
My fool usurps my body.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practis'd to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the difference?
It was a contention in publick.

He is weary of his life that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there should be such differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent; but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal.

6. Point in question; ground of controversy.

Are you acquainted with the difference, what holds this present question in the court?

7. A logical distinction.

D I F

Some are never without a difference, and commonly, by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch the matter.

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.
Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty.

9. Distinct kind.

This is notoriously known in some differences of brake or fern.

To Difference. v. a. [from the noun.] To cause a difference; to make one thing not the same as another.

Most are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs which are commonly observed, and are differenced by other concurrent causes.

Grass differenceth a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness.

We see nothing that differences the courage of Mnestheus from that of Sergethus.

Different. adj. [from differ.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air,
And other climes, where's different food and soil
Portend distempers.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and in the absence of those which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things.

Differential Method, is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals.

Differently. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius.

Differingly. adv. [from differing.] In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may remit the light so differingly, as to vary a colour.

Difficil. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvious.

Little used.

That that should give motion to an unwieldy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficult apprehension as any mystery in nature.

Latin was not more difficult,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficult in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touched none of those deniers which had been levied by the popes in England.

Difficilness. n. f. [from difficil.] Difficulty to be persuaded; incomppliance; impracticability. A word not in use, but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or apthens to oppose, or difficultness, or the like; but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief.

Difficult. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard;

DIF

1. Hard ; not easy ; not facil.
It is difficult in the eyes of this people. Zachar.
2. Troublesome ; vexatious.
3. Hard to please ; peevish ; morose.

DIFFICULTY, adv. [from difficult.] Hardly ; with difficulty.

A man who has always indulged himself in the full enjoyment of his station, will difficultly be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Rogers's Sermons.

DIFFICULTY, n. f. [from difficult ; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardness ; contrariety to easiness or facility.
The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty ; a service that requires our greatest care and attention. Rogers.
2. That which is hard to accomplish ; that which is not easy.
They mistake difficulties for impossibilities : a pernicious mistake certainly ; and the more pernicious, for that men are seldom convinced of it, till their convictions do them no good. South.
3. Distress ; opposition.
Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat :
Thus difficulties prove a foul legitimately great. Dryden.

4. Perplexity in affairs ; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie under some difficulties, by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden their manufactures. Addison on Italy.

5. Objection ; cavil.
Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

TO DIFFIDE, v. n. [diffido, Lat.] To distrust ; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear
The woman did the new solution hear :
The man diffides in his own augury,
And doubts the gods. Dryden.

DIFFIDENCE, n. f. [from diffide.]

1. Distrust ; want of confidence in others.
No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another ; but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought scandal
To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Doubt ; want of confidence in ourselves.
If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence, arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always, when you doubt your sense ;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatsoever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence, lest possibly they may be in the wrong ; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DIFFIDENT, adj. [from diffide.]

1. Distrustful ; doubting others.
Be not diffident.
Of wisdom ; she deserts thee not, if thou Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her nigh. Milton.

Pliny speaks of the Seres, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbutnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, used of things ; uncertain.
I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himself ; not confident.
I am not so confident of my own sufficiency as not willingly to admit the counsel of others ; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brutally to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

Distress makes the humble heart diffident. Clarissa.

DIF

TO DIFFIND, v. a. [diffindo, Lat.] To cleave in two ; to split. Dis.

DIFFISION, n. f. [diffisso, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting. Dis.

DIFFLATION, n. f. [difflare, Latin.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind. Dis.

DIFFLUENCE, n. f. [from difflo, Lat.] The quality of falling away on all sides ; the effect of fluidity ; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form ; but rather a consistence or determination of its fluidity, and omitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIFFLUENT, adj. [diffuens, Latin.] Flowing every way ; not consistent ; not fixed.

DIFFORM, adj. [from forma, Latin.] Contrary to uniform ; having parts of different structure ; dissimilar ; unlike ; irregular : as a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities ; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or fortuitous position of the pores of glasses. Newton.

DIFFORMITY, n. f. [from difform.] Diversity of form ; irregularity ; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present disposition of things, they desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things best. Brown's Vulgar Err.

DIFFRACTIONISEMENT, n. f. [franchise, Fr.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

TO DIFFUSE, v. a. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way ; to pour without particular direction.
When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way. Burnet's Theory.

2. To spread ; to scatter ; to disperse.
Wisdom had ordain'd
Good out of evil to create ; instead
Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse
His good to worlds, and ages infinite. Milton.

No sect wants its apostles to propagate or diffuse it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,
Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name,
And through the conquer'd world diffuse our fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden's Good Person.

DIFFUSE, adj. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. Scattered ; widely spread.
2. Copious ; not concise.

DIFFUSED, participial adj. [from diffuse.] This word seems to have signified, in Shakespeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once,
With some diffus'd song. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

He grows like savages,
To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural. Shakespeare's Henry V.

DIFFUSEDLY, adv. [from diffused.] Wildly ; dispersedly ; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSEDNESS, n. f. [from diffus'd.] The state of being diffused ; dispersion.

DIFFUSELY, adv. [from diffuse.]

1. Widely ; extensively.
2. Copiously ; not concisely.

DIFFUSION, n. f. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion ; the state of being scattered every way.
Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Natural History.

DIG

A sheet of very well sleeked marble paper did not cast distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion ; but threw its beams, unstained and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiousness ; exuberance of style.

DIFFUSIVE, adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.
Diffusive of themselves, where-e'er they pass
They make that warmth in others they expect :
Their valour works like bodies on a glass,
And does its image on their men project. Dryden.

2. Scattered ; dispersed ; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

All liquid bodies are diffusive ; for their parts being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over. South.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mafs,
And upward shoot, and kindle as they pass,
And with diffusive light adorn their heav'nly place. Dryden.

Cherish'd buds with hope, and fed with joy it grows ;
Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose,
And round the happy foil diffusive odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended.
They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated ; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of Christians. Tillotson.

DIFFUSIVELY, adv. [from diffusive.] Widely ; extensively ; every way.

DIFFUSIVENESS, n. f. [from diffusive.]

1. Extension ; dispersion ; the power of diffusing ; the state of being diffused.
2. Want of conciseness ; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend, is its diffusiveness ; you have sometimes the whole side of a medal overrun with it. Addison on Medals.

TO DIG, v. a. preter. dig, or digged ; part. pass. dig, or digged. [dic, Saxon, a ditch ; dyger, Danish, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spade.
Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall ; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezekiel.

2. To form by digging.
Seek with heart and mouth to build up the wall of Jerusalem, which you have broken down ; and to fill up the mines that you have digged by craft and subtlety, to overthrow the same. Whitgift.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells ; for he had much cattle. 2 Chron xxvi. 10.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.
The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as those of your house ; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn
The branches lopt. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.
A ravenous vulture in his open'd side,
Her crooked beak and cruel talons try'd ;
Still for the growing liver digged his breast,
The growing liver still supply'd the feast. Dryden's Axiid.

5. To gain by digging.
It is digged out of even the highest mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently ; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her annual income to the crooked share ;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her store,
Digg'd from her entrails first the precious ore. Dryden's Ovid.

TO DIC, v. n. To work with a spade ; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They ong for death, but it cometh not ; and dig for it more than for hid treasures. Job, iii. 17.

The

DIG

The Italians have often dug into lands described in old authors, as the places where statues or obelisks stood, and seldom fail of success.

Addison's Travels.

To DIG up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not flake mine ire.

Shakespeare.

DIGAMY. n. f. [digamia, Lat.] Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

Dr. Champny only proves, that archbishop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that such bigamy or digamy rather deprives a bishop of the lawful use of his power of ordaining.

Bishop Ferne.

DIGERENT. adj. [digerent, Lat.] That which has the power of digesting, or causing digestion. Dig.

DIGEST. n. f. [digesta, Lat.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or repository to the laws of mine own nation.

Bacon.

Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade.

Arbutnot on Coins.

To DIGEST. v. a. [digero, digestum, Latin.]

1. To distribute into various classes or repositories; to range or dispose methodically.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear?

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Each then his organs to digest his food;

One to beget, and one receive the brood. Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghill: a chemical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

Chosen friends, with sense refin'd,

Learning digested well.

Thomson.

5. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play

Leaps o'er the vault and firstlings of those broils,
'Ginning i' th' middle: starting thence away,
To what may be digested in a play.

Shakespeare.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

First, let us go to dinner.

—Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.
—No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;

Then howsoever thou speak'st, 'mong other things
I shall digest it.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The pleasure of numbers is, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility.

Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwall and Albany,

With my two daughters dowers, digest the third.

Shakespeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound; to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGEST. v. n. To generate matter as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGESTER. n. f. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or disposes.

2. He that digests or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters.

Arbutnot.

3. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state.

Quincy.

4. That which causes or strengthens the coactive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digester.

Temple.

DIGESTIBLE. adj. [from digest.] That which is capable of being digested or concocted in the stomach.

DIG

Those medicines that purge by stool are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.

Bacon's Natural History.

DIGESTION. n. f. [from digest.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation; heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion.

Temple.

Every moriel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion.

South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chemical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold.

Bacon's Natural History.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raife all the labour-houses of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there.

Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of methodising; the maturation of a design.

The digestion of the counfels in Sweden is made in senate, consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men.

Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to generate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion.

Sharp's Surgery.

DIGESTIVE. adj. [from digest.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

A chillsfactory menstruum, or a digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very state; the one active, piercing, and digestive by its heat; the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production.

Hale.

3. Methodising, adjusting.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought,
Th' future rule is into method brought.

Dryden.

DIGESTIVE. n. f. [from digest.] An application which disposes a wound to generate matter.

I dressed it with digestives.

Wise man on Alcester.

DIGESTURE. n. f. Concoction: not used.

Neither tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digestion; such as veal, sweetbreads.

Harvey.

DIGGER. n. f. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles.

Boyle.

To DIGHT. v. a. [Dihzan, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.]

1. To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn. It seems always to signify the past; the participle passive is digbt, as digbted in Hudibras is perhaps improper.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloisters pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar massy proof,
And storied windows richly digbt,
Casting a dim religious light.

Milton.

Just to the proud insulting lafs
Array'd and digbted Hudibras.

Hudibras.

DIG

2. To put on.
On his head his dreadful hat he digbt,
Which maketh him invincible to fight.

Hubbard's Tale.

DIGIT. n. f. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quicksilver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere.

Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten: so called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the numbers seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by most, but all or most of other digits have been as mystically applauded.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIGITATED. adj. [from digitus, Lat.] Branched out into divisions like fingers; as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multitudes, or such as are digitated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIGLADIATION. n. f. [digladiatio, Latin.] A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obscurity.

Glanville's Scipis.

DIGNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity: it is used chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are stiled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICATION. n. f. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person.

Walton's Angling.

To DIGNIFY. v. a. [from dignus, and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.

2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre to.

Such a day,

So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times,
Since Caesar's fortunes!

Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But your worth will dignify our feast.

No turbot dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.

Pope.

DIGNITARY. n. f. [from dignus, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to some dignity, to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superfluity, they may be persons of superior merit.

Swift.

DIGNITY. n. f. [dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.

Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him.

Hooker.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aspect.

Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands.

Cliffia.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place.

Faster than spring-time show'rs comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity.

For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them.

Shakespeare.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks.] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles; axioma &c.

VOL. I. N^o. 13. 3 O The

The sciences concluding from dignitas, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare assertions. Brown.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNITION. n. f. [from dignosco, Lat.] Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignities, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DIGRESS. v. n. [from digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn aside out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It seemeth to digress no farther, that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites. Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate: not in use.

I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part am forced to digress,
Which at more leisure I will so excuse
As you shall well be satisfied. Shakespeare.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the valour of a man. Shakespeare.

DIGRESSION. n. f. [from digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage; deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him. Sidney.

He, she knew, would intermix
Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses. Milton.

Here some digression I must make t' accuse Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muse. Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but near the equinoctial intersections, it is right and greater; near the solstices, more oblique and lesser.

DJUDICATION. n. f. [from djudicatio, Latin.] Judicial distinction.

DIKE. n. f. [dic, Saxon; dyk, Erse.]

1. A channel to receive water.

The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound
The rising rivers float the nether ground. Dryden's Virgil.

The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud
With deeper fable blots the silver flood. Pope's Dunciad.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it. Cowley.

TO DILACERATE. v. a. [from dilacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DILACERATION. n. f. [from dilaceratio, Lat.] The act of rending in two.

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres. Arbutnot.

TO DILANIATE. v. a. [from dilano, Latin.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind. Howell's Eng. Tears.

TO DILAPIDATE. v. n. [from dilapido, Latin.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

DILAPIDATION. n. f. [from dilapidatio, Latin.] The incumbent's suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same: and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed, any wilful waste in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and mansion-house belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DILATABILITY. n. f. [from dilatabile.] The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion. Arbutnot.

DILATABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches called branchia: these end in small air-bladders, dilatatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbutnot on Aliments.

DILATATION. n. f. [from dilatatio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending into greater space: opposed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright. Holder.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts. Bacon's Natural History.

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions. Newton.

TO DILATE. v. a. [from dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge: opposed to contract.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye fort'd with a prince's peer;
For now your light doth more itself dilate,
And in my darkness greater doth appear. Spenser.

Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.

Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erst; dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead: which for thee
Chiefly I fought; without thee, can despise. Milton.

Through all the air his sounding strings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.

Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;
Dilates its drops, and softens into air. Prior.

I mark the various fury of the winds;
These neither seasons guide, nor order binds:
They now dilate, and now contract their force;
Various their speed, but endless is their course. Prior.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length. Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theam
For to dilate at large; but urged fore,
With piercing words, and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise. Fairy Queen.

I observing,

Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakespeare's Othello.

TO DILATE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.

His heart dilates and glories in his strength. Addison.

2. To speak largely and copiously.

It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lustre, by any addition or eloquence of speech. Clarendon.

DILATOR. n. f. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinators, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in cholerick people. Arbutnot.

DILATORINESS. n. f. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DILATORY. adj. [from dilatoire, Fr. dilatorius, Lat.] Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and so to little purpose. Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakespeare's Othello.

These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools and knaves. Orway.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design. Addison's Spectator.

DILECTION. n. f. [from dilectio, Lat.] The act of loving; kindness.

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is his belief. Boyle's Seraphic Love.

DILEMMA. n. f. [from dilemma.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judges will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used, to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crotch. Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss;
Whom good or ill does equally confound,
And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound. Cowley.

2. A doubtful or difficult choice; a vexatious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desp'rate case!
To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma; either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead. Pope.

DILIGENCE. n. f. [from diligentia, Lat.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; unintermitted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.

4 Brethren,

D I M

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Pet. i. 10.

DILIGENT. adj. [diligens, Latin.]

1. Constant in application; persevering in endeavour; assiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy.

Seest thou a man diligent in his business; he shall stand before kings. Prov. xxii. 29.

2. Constantly applied; prosecuted with activity and perseverance; assiduous.

And the judges shall make diligent inquisition.

DILIGENTLY. adv. [from diligent.] With assiduity; with heed and perseverance; not carelessly; not idly; not negligently.

If you inquire not attentively and diligently, you shall never be able to discern a number of mechanical motions. Bacon.

The ancients have diligently examined in what consists the beauty of good postures.

DILL. n. f. [dile, Saxon.] It hath a slender, fibrose, annual root; the leaves are like those of fennel; the seeds are oval, plain, streaked, and bordered.

Dill is raised of seed, which is ripe in August.

Mortimer.

DILUCID. adj. [dilucidus, Latin.]

1. Clear; not opaque.

2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILUCIDATE. v. a. [from dilucidare, Lat.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not extenuate, but explain and dilucidate, according to the custom of the ancients.

DILUCIDATION. n. f. [from dilucidatio, Lat.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DILUENT. adj. [diluent, Latin.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DILUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it.

To DILUTE. v. a. [diluo, Latin.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.

Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as she was ordered by a physician, she got to bed. Locke.

The aliment ought to be thin to dilute, demulcent to temper, or acid to subdue.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To make weak.

The chamber was dark, lest these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light. Newton.

DILUTE. adj. Thin; attenuated.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch; and if they were more intense and full, the distance would be greater. Newton.

DILUTER. n. f. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment.

DILUTION. n. f. [dilutio, Lat.] The act of making any thing else thin or weak.

Opposite to dilution is coagulation, or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most liquid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly.

DILUVIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Latin.] Relating to the deluge.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally into all countries about. Burnet's Theory.

DIM. adj. [imme, Saxon; dy, Welsh; dow, Erse.]

For her true form, how can my spark discern, Which, dim by nature, art did never clear.

Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths. Rogers.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being. Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view, Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do. Pope.

4. Obstructing the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wondrous fair did seem to be, That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw

Through the dim shade, that all men might it see. Spenser.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,

It dims the dazed eyes, and daunts the senses quite. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim sighted. Bacon.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight? Locke.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head, With all such reading as was never read. Pope's Dunciad.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide, By conduct of some star doth make her way,

When as a storm hath dimin'd her trusty guide, Out of her course doth wander far astray. Spenser.

All of us have cause To wail the dimming of our shining star.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimin'd his face,

Thrice chang'd. Milton.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dim all his attendants.

Dryden.

DIMENSION. n. f. [dimensio, Lat.] Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it.

Deut. iv. 2.

D I M

D I M

To DIMINISH. v. n. To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgment I had increases rather than diminishes; and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject. Dryden.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye; Before the Boreal blasts the vessels fly.

Pope's Odyssey.

DIMINISHINGLY. adv. [from diminish.] In a manner tending to vilify, or lessen.

I never heard him censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent. Locke.

DIMINUTION. n. f. [diminutio, Lat.]

1. The act of making less; opposed to augmentation.

The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both. Hooker.

2. The state of growing less; opposed to increase.

The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force, and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet. Newton.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.

Gladly to thee Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;

Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd In military honour next. Philips.

4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.

Make me wise by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me. King Charles.

And all the way he roared as he went,
That all the forest with astonishment

Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein
Fled fast away from that so dreadful din.

Hubbard's Tale.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;
To make an earthquake: sure, it was the roar

Of a whole herd of lions. Shakespeare's Tempest.

While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thin;

And to the stack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly struts, his dame before. Milton.

Now night over heav'n
Inducing dark, grateful truce impos'd,

And silence, on the odious din of war. Milton.

How, while the troubled elements around,
Earth, water, air, the stunning din rebound

Through streams of smoke and adverse fire he rides,
While every shot is levell'd at his sides. Smith.

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear there together. Locke.

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stun with noise; to harass with clamour.

With hungry cries. Osway's Venice Preserved.

2. To impress with violent and continued noise.

What shall we do, if his majesty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's halfpence? This hath been often dinned in my ears.

Swift.

To DINE. v. n. [diner, Fr.] To eat the chief meal about the middle of the day.

Perhaps some merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner:

Good sister, let us dine, and never fret. Shakespeare.

Myself, he, and my sister,
To day did dine together. Shakespeare.

He would dine with him the next day. Clarendon.

Thus, of your heroes and brave boys,
With whom old Homer makes such noise,

The greatest actions I can find,
Are, that they did their work and din'd. Prior.

Let us all ring fancy's knell;
Ding, dong bell. Shakespeare.

DINGLE. n. f. [from ben, or din, a hollow, Sax.] A hollow between hills; a dale.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood;

And every bosky bourn from side to side,
My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood. Milton.

DINING-ROOM. n. f. [dine and room.] The principal apartment of the house; the room where entertainments are made.

He went out from the dining-room before he had fallen into error by the intemperance of his meat, or the deluge of drink.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

DINNER. n. f. [diner, French.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.

Let me not stay a jot for dinner;
Go, get it ready. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Before dinner and supper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the public prayers of the church, or some parts of them, be said publicly in the family. Taylor.

The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,
The quarry share, their plenteous dinner haste.

Dryden's Æneid.

DINNER-TIME. n. f. [dinner and time.] The time of dining.

At dinner-time,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet.

Shakespeare.

Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope.

DINT. n. f. [dynt, Saxon]

1. A blow; a stroke.

Much daunted with that dint, her sense was daz'd;

Yet kindling rage, herself she gather'd round. Spenser.

D I N

D I P

Neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in these bright arms,

Though temper'd heav'nly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milton.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.

He embrac'd her naked body o'er,
And, straining hard the statue, was afraid

His hands had made a dint, and hurt the maid. Dryden.

3. Violence; force; power.

Now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy; and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.

The dewlap'd bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;

His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his mistress claims. Gay.

To DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other do assail,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impress

Deep dinted furrows in the batter'd mails:
The iron walls to ward their blows are weak and frail. Fairy Queen.

Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary bone,
No more shall you return to it alone;

It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.

Deep dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws:
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden's Æneid.

DINUMERATION. n. f. [dinumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering out singly.

DIOCESAN. n. f. [from diocesis.] A bishop as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

As a diocesan you are like to outdo yourself in all other capacities, and exemplify every word of this discourse. South.

I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others.

DIOCESS. n. f. [diocesis.] A Greek word compounded of dia and oikos. The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; for this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into dioceses, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical. Cowell.

None ought to be admitted by any bishop, but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocesis a convenient time. Whitgift.

He should regard the bishop of Rome as the islanders of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Constance in Normandy; that is, nothing at all; since by that French bishop's refusal to swear unto our king, those isles were annexed to the diocesis of Winchester. Raleigh's Essays.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocesis, containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

DIOPTICAL. n. f. [dioptra.] Affording

DIOPTICK. } a medium for the sight; assisting the sight in the view of distant objects.

Being excellently well furnished with dioptrical glasses, he had not been able to see the sun spotted. Boyle.

View the asperities of the moon through a dioptrick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows. Mor's Antidote against Atheism.

DIOPTICKS. n. f. A part of opticks, treating of the different refractions of the light passing different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c. Harris.

DIOPTHRO'SIS. n. f. [dioptra, of dioptra, to make straight.] A surgical operation, by which crooked or distorted members are restored to their primitive and regular shape. Harris.

To DIP. v. a. pret. dipped; particip. dipped, or dippt. [diptan, Saxon; diopen, Dutch.]

1. To

DIP

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor. The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon.

Ayliffe's Parergon.
Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkl'd round, and thrice aloud
Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd.

Dryden's Æneid.
He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
And from the bright meridian where he stood,
Descending, dipp'd his hands in lover's blood.

Dryden's Fables.
The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire;
One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre.

Pope.
Now on fancy's easy wing convey'd,
The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius sits to dip poetick souls.

Pope's Dunciad.
So fishes rising from the main,
Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;

The moisture dry'd, they sink again,
And dip their wings again to fly.

Swift.
2. To moisten; to wet.
And though not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring
dew

Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder.

Milton.
3. To be engaged in any affair.
When men are once dip't, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on 'till they are stifled.

L'Estrange.
In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dip't in the rebellion of the commons.

Dryden's Fables.
4. To engage as a pledge: generally used for the first mortgage.

Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal in trusty hands,
Live on the use, and never dip thy lands.

Dryden's Perf.
To DIP. v. n.
1. To sink, to immerge.

We have snakes in our cups, and in our dishes;
and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot.

L'Estrange.
2. To enter; to pierce.
The vulture dipping in Prometheus' side,
His bloody beak with his torn liver dy'd.

Granville.
3. To enter slightly into any thing.
When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dipping in the first volume.

Pope.
4. To take that which comes first; to chuse by chance.

With what ill thoughts of Jove art thou possessed?

Would'st thou prefer him to some man? Suppose
I dipp'd among the worst, and Staius chose?

Dryden's Perf.
DIPCHICK. n. f. [from dip and chick.] The name of a bird.

Dipchick is so named of his diving and littleness.

Carew.
DIPE'TALOUS. adj. [διπς and τεταλος.] Having two flower-leaves.

DIPHTHONG. n. f. [διφθονγ.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound; as vain, leaf, Cesar.

We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word.

Holder's Elements of Speech.
Make a diphthong of the second eta and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone.

Pope.
DI'PLOE. n. f. The inner plate or lamina of the skull.

DI'PLO'MA. n. f. [διπλωμα.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege, so called, because they used formerly to be written on waxed tables, and folded together.

DIR

DI'PPER. n. f. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

DI'PPING Needle. n. f. A device which shews a particular property of the magnetick needle, so that, besides its polarity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon, when duly poised about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively.

DI'PSAS. n. f. [Latin, from δύω, to thirst.]
A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphibia dire,
Cerafles horn'd, hydrus, and ellops drear,

Milton.
And dipsas.

DI'TOTE. n. f. [διτωτε.] A noun consisting of two cases only.

DI'TYCH. n. f. [διπτυχα, Lat. two leaves folded together.] A register of bishops and martyrs.

The commemoration of saints was made out of the diptychs of the church, as appears by multitudes of places in St. Austin.

Stillingfleet.
DIRE. adj. [divus, Lat.] Dreadful; dismal; mournful; horrible; terrible; evil in a great degree.

Women fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
More by intemperance die
In meats, and drinks, which on the earth shall bring

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear.

Milton.
Hydras, and gorgons, and chimæras dire.
Or what the cross, dire-looking planet smites,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites.

Milton.
Dire was the tossing, deep the groans, despair
Tended the sick.

Milton.
Discord! dire sister of the slaughter'd pow'r,
Small at her birth, but rising ev'ry hour;
While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound,
She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around.

Pope.
DIRE'CT. adj. [directus, Latin.]
1. Strait, not crooked.

2. Not oblique.
The ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross lines.

Bentley.
3. [In astronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progressively through the zodiac;
not retrograde.

Two geomantick figures were display'd,
Above his head, a warrior and a maid,
One when direct, and one when retrograde.

Dryden's Fables.
4. Not collateral, as the grandson succeeds his grandfire in a direct line.

5. Apparently tending to some end, as in a strait line.

Such was as then the state of the king, as it was no time, by direct means to seek her. And such was the state of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of seeking her.

Sidney.
He that does this, will be able to cast off all that is superfluous; he will see what is pertinent, what coherent, what is direct to, what slides by the question.

Locke.
6. Open; not ambiguous.
There be, that are in nature faithful and sincere, and plain and direct; not crafty and involved.

Bacon.
7. Plain; exprefs.
He no where, that I know, says it in direct words.

Locke.
To DIRE'CT. v. a. [dirigo, directum, Latin.]
1. To aim or drive in a strait line.

Two eagles from a mountain's height,
By Jove's command direct their rapid flight.

Pope.
2. To point against as a mark.
The spear flew hissing through the middle space,
And pierc'd his throat, directed at his face.

Dryden's Æneid.

DIR

3. To regulate; to adjust.
It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.

Jer. x. 23.
Wisdom is profitable to direct. Ecclef. x. 10.

All that is in a man's power, is to mind what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding; or elie to direct and fort, and call in such as he desires.

Locke.
4. To prescribe certain measure; to mark out a certain course.

He directeth it under the whole heavens, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth.

Job, xxxvii. 3.
5. To order; to command: to direct is a softer term than to command.

DIRE'CTOR. n. f. [director, Latin.]
1. One that directs; one that prescribes.

2. An instrument that serves to guide any manual operation.

DIRE'CTION. n. f. [directio, Latin.]
1. Aim at a certain point.

These mens opinions are not the product of judgment, or the consequence of reason; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direc- tion.

Locke.
The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that distinguishes charity.

Smallbridge.
2. Motion impressed by a certain impulse.
No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body can either move of itself, or of itself alter the direction of its motion.

Cleyn.
3. Order; command; prescription.
From the counsel that St. Jerome giveth Læta, of taking heed how she read the apocrypha; as also by the help of other learned mens judgments, delivered in like case, we may take direction.

Hooker.
Ev'n now
I put myself to thy direction.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The nobles of the people digged it by the direc- tion of the law-giver.

Numb. xxi. 18.
Mens passions and God's direction seldom agree.

K. Charles.
General directions for scholastic disputers, is never to dispute upon mere trifles.

Watts.
4. Regularity; adjustment.
All nature is but art unknown to thee,
All chance, direction which thou canst not see.

Pope.
DIRE'CTIVE. n. f. [from direct.]
1. Having the power of direction:
A law therefore generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodness of operation.

Hooker.
A power of command there is without all question, though there be some doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reside, whether in the will or the understanding. The true resolution is, that the directive command for counsel is in the understanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will.

Bramhall against Hobbes.
On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies.

Græc.
2. Informing; shewing the way.
Nor visited by one directive ray,
From cottage streaming, or from airy ha'l.

Thomson.
DIRE'CTLY. adj. [from direct.]
1. In a strait line; rectilinearly.

The more a body is nearer to the eyes, and the more directly it is opposed to them, the more it is enlightened; because the light languishes and lessens the farther it removes from its proper source.

Dryden's Duressnoy.
There was no other place assigned to any of this matter, than that whereunto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe which was just underneath.

Newton's Opticks.
If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it shall be refracted by the incident ray.

2. Immediately; apparently; without cir-cumlocution.

cumlocution: without any long train of consequence.

Infidels being clean without the church, deny directly, and utterly reject, the very principles of Christianity, which hereticks embrace erroneously by misconstruction. Hooker.

No man hath hitherto been so impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer. Hooker.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myself enemies in the papists directly, because they have kept the scripture from us what they could. Dryden's Pref. to Rel. Laici.

His work directly tends to raise sentiments of honour and virtue in his readers. Addison's Freeholder.

No reason can be assigned, why it is best for the world that God Almighty hath absolute power, which doth not directly prove that no mortal man should have the like. Swift.

DIRECTNESS. n. f. [from direct.] Straitness; tendency to any point; the nearest way.

They argued from celestial causes only, the constant vicinity of the sun, and the directness of his rays: never suspecting that the body of the earth had so great an efficiency in the changes of the air. Bentley.

DIRECTOR. n. f. [director, Latin.]

1. One that has authority over others; a superintendent; one that has the general management of a design or work.

Himself stood director over them, with nodding or stamping, shewing he did like or dislike those things he did not understand. Swift.

In all affairs thou sole director. Swift.

2. A rule; an ordinance.

Common forms were not design'd Directors to a noble mind. Swift.

What made directors cheat in south-sea year? Pope.

6. An instrument in surgery, by which the hand is guided in its operation.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by sliding it on a director, the groove of which prevents its being misguiding. Sharp's Surgery.

DIRECTORY. n. f. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers published in the rebellion for the direction of their feet in acts of worship.

As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot consent to the taking away the book of common prayer. Oxford Reasons against the Gov.

DIREFUL. adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been censured as not analogical; all other words compounded with full consisting of a substantive and full, as dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy.] Dire; dreadful; dismal; joyful, or full of joy. Point of spear it never piercen would, Ne dint of direful sword, divide the substance could. Fairy Queen.

But yet at last, whereas the direful fiend, She saw not stir, off shaking vain affright, She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end; Then God she pray'd, and thank'd her faithful knight. Fairy Queen.

Direful hap betide that hated wretch That makes us wretched by the death of thee. Shakespeare.

The voice of God himself speaks in the heart of men, whether they understand it or no; and by secret intimations gives the sinner a foretaste of that direful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter. South.

I curs'd the direful author of my woes: 'Twas told again, and thence my ruin rose. Dryden.

The wrath of Peleus' son, the direful spring Of all the Grecian woes, O goddess, sing. Pope.

DIREFULNESS. n. f. [from dire.] Dismalness; horror; hideousness.

Direful, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts, Cannot once start me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DIREPTION. n. f. [direptio, Latin.] The act of plundering.

DIRGE. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn dirige gressus meus, as some pretend; but from the Teutonic dyrke laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Vorshegan. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

Th' imperial jointress of this warlike state, Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy, With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage, In equal scale weighing delight and dole, Taken to wife. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Mean while the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the diriges and obsequies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon.

You from above shall hear each day, One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay, These your own anthems shall become, Your lasting epicedium. Sandys.

All due measures of her mourning kept, Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept. Dryden.

DIRIGENT. adj. [dirigens, Latin.]

The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line describent is carried in the generation of any figure. Harris.

2. The state of bursting, or breaking.

DIS. An inseparable particle used in composition, implying commonly a privative or negative signification of the word to which it is joined; as to arm, to disarm; to join, to disjoin. It is borrowed from dis, used by the French and Spaniards in the sense; as disjunct, to untie; desertion, to banish; from the Latin dis as disruo, to build; desruo, to destroy.

DISABILITY. n. f. [from disable.]

1. Want of power to do any thing; weakness; impotence.

Our consideration of creatures, and attention unto scriptures, are not in themselves things of like disability to breed or beget faith. Hooker.

Many withdrew themselves out of pure faintness, and disability to attend the conclusion. Raleigh.

He that knows most of himself, knows least of his knowledge, and the exercised understanding is conscious of its disability. Glauville.

The ability of mankind does not lie in the impotency or disabilities of brutes. Locke.

2. Want of proper qualifications for any purpose; legal impediment.

A suit is commenced in a temporal court for an inheritance, and the defendant pleads in disability, that the plaintiff is a bastard. Ayliffe's Parergon.

This disadvantage which the dissenters at present lie under, of a disability to receive church preferments, will be easily remedied by the repeal of the test. Swift.

TO DISABLE. v. a. [dis and able.]

1. To deprive of force; to weaken; to disqualify for any act.

The invasion and rebellion did not only disable this king to be a conqueror, but deprived him both of his kingdom and life. Davies's Ireland.

Nor so is overcome Satan, whose fall from heav'n, a deadlier bruise Disabled not to give thee thy death's wound. Milton.

A Christian's life is a perpetual exercise, a wrestling and warfare, for which sensual pleasure disables him, by yielding to that enemy with whom he must strive. Taylor's Holy Living.

2. To hinder from action: used of things.

I have known a great fleet disabled for two months, and thereby lose great occasions by an indisposition of the admiral. Temple.

5. To

5. To exclude as wanting proper qualifications. I will not disable any for proving a scholar, nor yet dissemble that I have seen many happily forced upon the course, to which by nature they seemed much indisposed.

To DISABUSE. v. a. [dis and abuse.] To set free from a mistake; to disentangle from a fallacy; to set right; to undeceive.

The imposture and fallacy of our senses impose not only on common heads, but even more refined mercuries, who have the advantages of an improved reason to disabuse you.

Those teeth fair Lyce must not show,
If she would bite her lovers: though
Like birds they stoop at seeming grapes,
Are disabused, when first the gapes. Waller.
If by simplicity you meant a general defect in those that profess angling, I hope to disabuse you.

Chaos of thought and passion, all confus'd;
Still by himself abus'd, or disabus'd. Pope.
DISACCOMMODATION. n. f. [dis and accommodation.] The state of being unfit or unprepared.

The most shining merit goes down to posterity with disadvantage, when it is not placed by writers in its proper light.

Those parts already published give reason to think, that the Iliad will appear with no disadvantage to that immortal poem.

Their testimony will not be of much weight to its disadvantage, since they are liable to the common objection of condemning what they did not understand.

3. A state not prepared for defence. No fort can be so strong,

Ne fleshly breast can armed be so found,
But all at last be won with batt'ry long,

Or unawares at disadvantage found. Fairy Queen.

To DISADVANTAGE. v. a. [dis and advantage.] To injure in interest of any kind.

All other violences are so far from advancing Christianity, that they extremely weaken and disadvantage it.

DISADVANTAGEABLE. adj. [dis and advantage.] Contrary to profit; producing loss. A word not used.

In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long; for hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageable as interest.

DISADVANTAGEOUS. adj. [dis and advantage.] Contrary to interest; contrary to convenience; unfavourable.

A multitude of eyes will narrowly inspect every part of an eminent man, consider him nicely in all views, and not be a little pleased when they have taken him in the worst and most disadvantageous lights.

DISADVANTAGEOUSLY. adv. [dis and advantage.] In a manner contrary to interest or profit; in a manner not favourable.

An approving nod or smile serves to drive you on, and make you display yourselves more disadvantageously.

They had attempted to disaffect and discontent his majesty's late army.

DISAFFECTED. part. adj. [dis and affect.] Not disposed to zeal or affection. Usually applied to those who are enemies to the government.

By denying civil worship to the emperor's statues, which the custom then was to give, they were proceeded against as disaffected to the emperor.

DISAFFECTEDLY. adv. [dis and affect.] After a disaffected manner.

DISAFFECTEDNESS. n. f. [dis and affect.] The quality of being disaffected.

DISAFFECTION. n. f. [dis and affect.] 1. Dislike; ill-will.

In making laws, princes must have regard to the public dispositions, to the affections and disaffections of the people, and must not introduce a law with public scandal and displeasure.

2. Want of zeal for the government; want of ardour for the reigning prince.

In this age, every thing disliked by those who think with the majority, is called disaffection.

3. Disorder; bad constitution: in a physical sense.

The disease took its original merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the peccancy of the humours.

DISAFFIRMANCE. n. f. [dis and affirm.] Confutation; negation.

That kind of reasoning which reduceth the opposite conclusion to something that is apparently absurd, is a demonstration in disaffirmance of any that is affirmed.

To DISAFFOREST. v. a. [dis and forest.] To throw open to common purposes; to reduce from the privileges of a forest to the state of common ground.

The commissioners of the treasury moved the king to disforest some forests of his, explaining themselves of such forests as lay out of the way, not near any of the king's houses.

How happy's he, which hath due place assign'd
To his beasts; and disafforded his mind?

To DISAGREE. v. n. [dis and agree.] 1. To differ; not to be the same.

The mind clearly and infallibly perceives all distinct ideas to disagree; that is, the one not to be the other.

2. To differ; not to be of the same opinion.

Why both the bands in worship disagree,
And some adore the flow'r, and some the tree.

3. To be in a state of opposition: followed by from or with, before the opposite.

It containeth many improprieties, disagreeing almost in all things from the true and proper description.

Strange it is, that they reject the plainest sense of scripture, because it seems to disagree with what they call reason.

DISAGREEABLE. adj. [dis and agree.] 1. Contrary; unsuitable.

Some demon, an enemy to the Greeks, had forced her to a conduct disagreeable to her sincerity.

2. Unpleasant; offensive.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, either agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states.

DISAGREEABLENESS. n. f. [dis and agreeable.] 1. Unsuitableness; contrariety.

2. Unpleasantness; offensiveness.

A father will hug and embrace his beloved son for all the dirt and foulness of his cloaths; the dearness of the person easily apologizing for the disagreeableness of the habit.

DISAGREEMENT. n. f. [dis and agree.] 1. Difference; dissimilitude; diversity; not identity; not likeness.

These carry such plain and evident notes and characters, either of disagreement or affinity with one another, that the several kinds of them are easily distinguished.

2. Difference of opinion; contrariety of sentiments.

They seemed one to cross another, as touching their several opinions about the necessity of sacraments, whereas in truth their disagreement is not great.

To DISALLOW. v. a. [dis and allow.] 1. To deny authority to any.

When, said she,
Were those first councils disallow'd by me?
Or where did I at sure tradition strike,
Provided still it were apostolic?

2. To consider as unlawful; not to permit.

Their usual kind of disputing sheweth, that they do not disallow only these Romish ceremonies which are unprofitable, but count all unprofitable which are Romish.

3. To censure by some posterior act.

It was known that the most eminent of those who professed his own principles, publicly disallowed his proceedings.

4. To censure; not to justify.

There is a secret, inward, foreboding fear, that some evil or other will follow the doing of that which a man's own conscience disallows him in.

To DISALLOW. v. n. To refuse permission; not to grant; not to make or suppose lawful.

God doth in converts, being married, allow continuance with infidels, and yet disallow that the faithful, when they are free, should enter into bonds of wedlock with such.

DISALLOWABLE. adj. [dis and allow.] Not allowable; not to be suffered.

DISALLOWANCE. n. f. [dis and allow.] Prohibition.

To DISANIMATE. v. a. [dis and animate.] 1. To deprive of life.

2. To discourage; to deject; to depress.

The presence of a king engenders love amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends, as it disanimates his enemies.

He was confounded and disannated at his presence, and added, How can the servant of my lord talk with my lord?

DISANIMATION. n. f. [dis and animate.] Privation of life.

They cannot in reason retain that apprehension after death, as being affections which depend on life, and depart upon disanimation.

To DISANNUL. v. a. [dis and annul.] This word is formed contrarily to analogy, by those who, not knowing the meaning of the word annul, intended to form a negative sense by the needless use of the negative particle.

It ought therefore to be rejected as ungrammatical and barbarous. To annul; to deprive of authority; to vacate; to make null; to make void; to nullify.

The Jews ordinances for us to resume, were to check our Lord himself, which hath disannulled them.

That gave him power of disannulling of laws, and disposing of men's fortunes and estates, and the the like points of absolute power, being in themselves harsh and odious. Bacon.

To be in both worlds full,
Is more than God was, who was hungry here:
Wouldst thou his laws of fasting disannul? Herbert.

Wilt thou my judgments disannul? Defame
My equal rule, to clear thyself of blame? Sandys.

DISANNU'LEMENT. n. f. [from disannul.] The act of making void.

To DISAPPE'AR. v. n. [disparaître, French.] To be lost to view; to vanish out of sight; to fly; to go away.

She disappear'd, and left me dark! I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore. Milton.

When the night and winter disappear,
The purple morning rising with the year,
Salutes the Spring. Dryden.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Criticks I saw, that other names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind. Pope.

To DISAPPO'INT. v. a. [dis and appoint.] To disappoint of expectation; to balk; to hinder from something expected.

The superior Being can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes. Tillotson.

Whilst the champion with redoubled might,
strikes home the jav'lin, his retiring foe
Shrinks from the wound, and disappoints the blow. Addison.

There's nothing like surprizing the rogues: how will they be disappointed, when they hear that thou hast prevented their revenge? Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are disappointed by the silence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praises. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing lost by disappointment.

The Janizaries, disappointed by the bassas of the spoils, received of the bounty of Solymán a great largess. Knolles.

DISAPPO'INTMENT. n. f. [from disappoint.] Defeat of hopes; miscarriage of expectations.

It is impossible for us to know what are calamities, and what are blessings: how many accidents have pass'd for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen? How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin? Spectator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them. Addison's Spectator.

DISAPPROBATION. n. f. [dis and approbation.] Censure; condemnation; expression of dislike.

He was obliged to publish his letters, to shew his disapprobation of the publishing of others. Pope.

To DISAPPROVE. v. a. [disapprover, French.]

1. To dislike; to censure.
I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd;
Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disapprov'd. Prior.

Without good breeding, truth is disapprov'd;
That only makes superior sense belov'd. Pope.

2. To reject as disliked; not to confirm by concurrence.

A project for a treaty of barrier with the States was transmitted hither from Holland, and was disapproved of by our courts. Swift.

DISARD. n. f. [dis and ard, Saxon, a fool, Skinner; disur, French, funius.] A prattler; a boasting talker. This word is inserted both by Skinner and funius; but I do not remember it.

To DISARM. v. a. [disarm, French.]

1. To spoil or divest of arms; to deprive of arms.

An order was made by both houses for disarming
all the Papists in England. Clarendon.

I am still the same,
By different ways still moving to one fame;
And by disarming you, I now do more
To save the town, than arming you before. Dryden.

2. It has of before the arms taken away.
They would be immediately disarmed of their great magazine of artillery. Locke.

To DISARRA'Y. v. a. [dis and array.] To undress any one; to divest of cloaths.

So, as the bad, the witch they disarray'd. Fairy Queen.

Now night is come, now soon her disarray,
And in her bed her lay. Spenser's Epithalamium.

DISARRA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disorder; confusion; loss of the regular order of battle.
He returned towards the river, to prevent such danger as the disarray occasioned by the narrowness of the bridge, might cast upon them. Hayward.

Disarray and shameful rout ensue,
And force is added to the fainting crew. Dryden's Fables.

2. Undress.

DISASSIDU'ITY. n. f. Absence of care or attention.

The Cecilians kept him back; as very well knowing that, upon every little absence or disassiduity, he should be subject to take cold at his back. Wotton.

DISA'STER. n. f. [desastre, French.]

1. The blast or stroke of an unfavourable planet.
Stars shone with trains of fire, dews of blood fall; Shakespeare.

Disasters veil'd the sun; and the moist star
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse. Shakespeare.

2. Misfortune; grief; mishap; misery; calamity.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair,
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care,
Some dire disaster, or by force or flight;
But what, or where, the fates have wrapt in night. Pope.

To DISA'STER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blast by the stroke of an unfavourable star.

Ah, chaste bed of mine, said she, which never heretofore couldst accuse me of one defiled thought, how canst thou now receive that *disaster*ed change-ling? Sidney.

2. To afflict; to mischief.

These are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks. Shakespeare.

In his own fields, the swain Disaster'd stands. Thomson.

DISA'STROUS. adj. [from disaster.]

1. Unlucky; not fortunate.
That seemeth a most disastrous day to the Scots, not only in regard of this overthrow, but for that upon the same day they were defeated by the English at Floddenfield. Hayward.

2. Gloomy; threatening misfortune.

The moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton.

3. Unhappy; calamitous; miserable; struck with affliction.

Then Juno, pitying her disastrous fate,
Sends Iris down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.

Immediately after his return from this very expedition, such disastrous calamities befel his family, that he burnt two of his children himself. South.

Fly the pursuit of my disastrous love,
And from my unhappy neighbourhood remove. Dryden.

DISA'STROUSLY. adv. [from disastrous.] In a dismal manner.

DISA'STROUSNESS. n. f. [from disastrous.] Un-

The heirs and posterity of them which yielded the fame, are either ignorant thereof, or do wilfully deny, or steadfastly disavow it. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The English did believe his name was therein abused, which he manifested to be true, by disa-vowing it openly afterwards. Hayward.

To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, and generally when a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. Bacon.

A man that acts below his rank, doth but disavow fortune, and seemeth to be conscious of his own want in worth, and doth but teach others to envy him. Bacon.

He only does his conquest disavow,
And thinks too little what they thought too much. Dryden.

We are reminded by the ceremony of taking an oath, that it is a part of that obedience which we learn from the gospel, expressly to disavow all evasions and mental reservations whatsoever. Addison's Freeholder.

DISAVO'WAL. n. f. [from disavow.] Denial.

An earnest disavowal of fear, often proceeds with which the maids rub their dishes.

A dish-clout of Jaquenetta's, he wears next his heart for a favour. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

Send them up to their masters with a dish-clout
pinned at their tails. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

DISH-WASHER. n. f. [dish and washer.] The name of a bird. Mergus.

DISHABILLÉ. adj. [dishabillé, Fr.] Undressed; loosely or negligently dressed.

Queen's are not to be too negligently dressed or dishabillé. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

DISHABILLÉ. n. f. Undress; loose dress.

A woman, who would preserve a lover's respect to her person, will be careful of her appearance before him when in dishabille. Clarissa.

To DISHABIT. v. a. [This word I have found only in Shakespeare.] To throw out of place; to drive from their habitation.

But for our approach those sleeping stones,
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide havock made.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISHARMONY. n. f. [dis and harmony.] Contrary to harmony.

To DISHARTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.] To discourage; to deject; to terrify; to depress.

To dishearten with fearful sentences, as though salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not so consonant with Christian charity. Hooker.

Be not disheartened then, nor cloud those looks,
That wont to be more cheerful and serene. Milton.

Yet neither thus disheartened nor dismay'd,
The time prepar'd I waited. Milton.

It is a consideration that might dishearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries; that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends.
Stillingfleet.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to rush upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it. Tillotson.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends, or even the fears of our disheartened enemies. Atterbury.

DISHERRISON. n. f. [dis and herison.] The act of debaring from inheritance.

To DISHERRIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from hereditary succession; to debar from an inheritance.

He tries to restore to their rightful heritage such good old English words as have been long time out of use, almost disherited. Spenser.

Nor how the Dryads and the woodland train,
Disherited, ran howling o'er the pain. Dryden.

76 DISHEVEL. v. a. [decheveler, French.] To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lady all alone,
With garments rent and hair dishevel'd,
Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan.

After followed great numbers of women weeping, with dishevel'd hair, scratching their faces, and tearing themselves, after the manner of the country.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with these appear,
And mourning matrons with dishevel'd hair.

The flames involv'd in smoke
Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,
Caught her dishevel'd hair and rich attire.

You this morn beheld his ardent eyes,
Saw his shin lock'd in her dishevel'd hair.
DISHING. adj. [from dish.] Concave: a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheels, some make them more dishing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by setting off the spokes and felloes more outwards.

DISHONEST. adj. [dis and honest.]
1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribed by a glozing appetite, for an utile or jucundum to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence.

He lays it down as a principle, that right or wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws and not by nature.

To-morrow will we be married—I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.

Disgraced; dishonoured.
Dishonest with lopp'd arms the youth appears,
Pou'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.

Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,
Her sacred domes involv'd in rolling fire,
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs and dishonest fears.

DISHONESTLY. adv. [from dishonest.]
1. Without faith; without probity; faithlessly; wickedly.

I protest he had the chain of me,
Tho' most dishonestly he doth deny it.

2. Lewdly; wantonly; unchastely.
A wife daughter shall bring an inheritance to her husband; but she that liveth dishonestly is her father's heaviness.

DISHONESTY. n. f. [from dishonest.]
1. Want of probity; faithlessness; violation of trust.

Their fortune depends upon their credit, and a stain of open public dishonesty must be to their disadvantage.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.
Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?—Hear'n be my witness you do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

DISHONOUR. n. f. [dis and honour.]
1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties.

He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend.

Take him from your husband and your lord,
'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life
She never knew harm-doing.

DISHONOURABLE. adj. [dis and honourable.]
1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.

This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune.

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judged wife of all; but she that dishonours him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands.

DISHONOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]
1. Shameful; reproachful; ignominious.

He did dishonourable find
Those articles which did our state decrease.

2. Being in a state of neglect or disesteem.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? And he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty?

DISHONOURER. n. f. [from dishonour.]
1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods
It would be, to ensnare an irreligious Dishonourer of Dagon.

2. A violator of chastity.

To DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor.

DISHONOUR. n. f. [dis and honour.] Peevishness; ill humour; uneasy state of mind.

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishonour, are also criminal.

DISIMPROVEMENT. n. f. [dis and improvement.]
Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; the contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and disimprovement of the earth.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations, for thirty years past, have been real disimprovements.

To DISINCARCERATE. v. a. [dis and incarcerate.]
To set at liberty; to free from prison.

The arfenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm air, to open the earth for to disincarcerate the same venene bodies.

DISINCLINATION. n. f. [from disincline.] Want of affection; flight; dislike; ill-will not heightened to aversion.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does not express all the respect possible.

To DISINCLINE. v. a. [dis and incline.] To produce dislike to; to make disaffected; to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they begun every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige.

DISINGENUITY. n. f. [from disingenious.] Meanness of artifice; unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work.

DISINGENUOUS. adj. [dis and ingenious.] Unfair; meanly; artful; viciously subtle; sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman; crafty.

'Tis disingenious to accuse our age
Of idleness, who all our powers engage
In the same studies, the same course to hold,
Nor think our reason for new arts too old.

It was a disingenious way of proceeding, to oppose a judgment of charity concerning their church, to a judgment of reason concerning the nature of actions.

There cannot be any thing so disingenious and misbecoming any rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason and the conviction of clear arguments.

DISINGENUOUSLY. adv. [from disingenious.] In a disingenious manner.

DISINGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from disingenious.] Mean subtlety; unfairness; low craft.

I might press them with the unreasonable, the disingeniousness of embracing a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance.

DISINHERISON. n. f. [dis and inherit.]
1. The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent and even oppose such disinherison.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinherisons or great injuries to the lawful children.

To DISINHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then just with us to disinherit
The unborn nephews for the father's fault?

Unmuffle, ye faint stars, and thou fair moon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos that reigns here
In double night of darkness, and of slander.

Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony,
That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able
To waste it all myself, and leave ye none;
So disinherited, how would ye bless
Me, now your curse!

Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication!

To DISINTER. v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take as out of the grave.

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wife, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred.

DISINTERESTED. n. f. [dis and interest, French.] It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interest, and I think more properly. Without regard to private advantage; not biased by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here,
When general old, disinterested and clear.

DISINTERESTMENT. n. f. [dis and interestment, French.] Disregard to private advantage; disinterest; disinterestedness. This word, like charges in the same sentence, is merely Gallick.

He has managed some of the charges of the kingdom with known ability, and laid them down with intire disinterestment.

DISINTEREST. n. f. [dis and interest.]
1. What is contrary to one's wish or prosperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent.

They judge it the great disinterest to Rome.

2. Indifference to profit; superiority to regards of private advantage.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [from disinterest.]
1. Superior

DIS

DIS

To DISINVITE. v. a. [dis and invite.] To retract an invitation. Diſt.

To DISJOIN. v. a. [dejoindre, Fr. dis and join.] To separate; to part from each other; to disunite; to funder.

Never shall my harp thy praise Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin. Milton.

Left different degree Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce Deity for thee, when fate will not permit. Milton.

Happier for me, that all our hours assign'd Together we had liv'd: ev'n not in death disjoin'd. Dryden.

Never let us lay down our arms against France, till we have utterly disjoined her from the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

To DISJOINT. v. a. [dis and joint.]

1. To put out of joint.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound, And their disjoined bones to powder ground. Sandys.

Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame, But mangle and disjoint the brittle frame? More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

2. To break at junctures; to separate at the part where there is a cement.

Mould ring arches, and disjointed columns. Irons.

3. To break in pieces; to dilaniate.

Rotation must disperse in air, All things which on the rapid orb appear; And if no power that motion should controul, It must disjoint and dissipate the whole. Blackwall.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very large and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts.

4. To carve a fowl.

5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches. Sidney.

The images her troubled fancy forms Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Smith.

To DISJOINT. v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoin, and all things suffer, Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

DISJOINT. participle. [from the verb.] Separated; divided. We now write disjointed.

Young Fortinbras, Holding a weak supposal of our worth; Thinks, by our late dear brother's death, Our state to be disjoint and out of frame. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DISJUDICATION. n. s. [disjudicatio, Lat.] Judgment; extermination: perhaps only mistaken for disjudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the disjudications we make of colours. Boyle on Colours.

DISJUNCT. adj. [disjunctus, Latin.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJUNCTION. n. s. [from disjunctus, Latin.] Disunion; separation; parting.

You may

Enjoy your mistress now, from whom, you see, There's no disjunction to be made, but by Your ruin. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical, or spiritual part, justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural. South.

DISJUNCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.]

1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass. Grew.

2. That which marks separation or opposition; as, I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions. Watts.

3. [In logic.] A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles: as, It is either day or night: The weather is either stormy or rainy: Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true: but the two first are not strictly true, because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining. Watts's Logic.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive; as, The earth moves in a circle, or an ellipsis; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipsis. Watts's Logic.

DISJUNCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united. Claude of the Decay of Pity.

DISK. n. s. [discus, Latin.]

1. The face of the sun, or any other planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high, Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newton.

Mercury's disk

Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye, Lost in the near effulgence. Thompson.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew.

In areas vary'd with mosaic art, Some whirl the disk, and some the javelin dart. Pope.

DISKINDNESS. n. s. [dis and kindness.]

1. Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Woodward.

DISLIKE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Disinclination; absence of affection: the contrary to fondness.

He then them took, and tempering goodly well Their contrary dislikes with loved means, Did place them all in order, and compel To keep themselves within their sundry reigns, Together link'd with adamant chains. Spenser.

Your dislikes to whom I would be pleasing, Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakespeare.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual dislike to sin. Hammond's Praef. Catechism.

Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy than upon reason. L'Estrange.

Sorrow would have been as silent as thoughts, as severe as philosophy. It would have rested in inward senses, tacit dislikes. South.

The jealous man is not angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are in his own character, you discover not only your dislike of another, but of himself. Addison.

2. Discord; dissention; disagreement. This sense is not now in use.

This said Aletes, and a murmur rose That shew'd dislike among the Christian peers. Farfax.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill-will or disgust.

What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him;

What like, offensive. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Ye dislike, and so undo The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.

Whoever dislikes the digressions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLIKEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign: not in use.

I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenser's Ireland.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To make unlike. Unusual.

Muffle your face, Disfigure you; and, as you can, dislike The truth of your own seeming. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DISLIKELESS. n. s. [dis and likeless.] Dissimilitude; not resemblance; unlikeness.

That which is not designed to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeless to it; and such, excepting those of substances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLIKE. n. s. [from dislike.] A disapprover; one that is not pleased.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleasing a majority, so great that the dislikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate; to tear limb from limb. Diſt.

To DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and limb.] To unpaint; to strike out of a picture.

The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcus gone.
Shakespeare.

To DISLODGE. v. n. To go away to another place.

Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour,
Friendliest to sleep, and silence, he resolv'd
With all his legions to dislodge.
Milton.

DISLOYAL. adj. [desloyal, French; dis and loyal.]

1. Not true to allegiance; faithless; false to a sovereign; disobedient.

Foul distrust, and breach Disloyal on the part of man; revolt
And disobedience.
Milton.

2. Dishonest; perfidious. Obsolete.

Such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom; but in a man that's just,
They're cold delations working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Not true to the marriage-bed.

The lady is disloyal.

— Disloyal! The word is too good to paint out her wickedness.
Shakespeare.

Disloyal town;

Speak, didst not thou
Forfake thy faith, and break the nuptial vow?
Dryden.

4. False in love; not constant. The three latter senses are now obsolete.

DISLOYALLY. adv. [from disloyal.] Not faithfully; treacherously; disobediently.

DISLOYALTY. n. f. [from disloyal.]

To DISMANTLE. v. a. [dis and mantle.]

1. To deprive of address; to strip; to denude.

He that makes his prince despised and undervalued, and beats him out of his subjects hearts, may easily strip him of his other garbisons, having already dispossessed him of his strongest, by dismantling him of his honour, and seizing his reputation.
South.

2. To loose; to throw off a dress; to throw open.

This is most strange!

That she, who ev'n but now was your best object,
Dearest and best, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour. Shakespeare's King Lear.

DIS

3. To strip a town of its outworks.
It is not sufficient to possess our own fort, without the dismantling and demolishing of our enemies.
Hakerwill.

4. To break down any thing external.
His eyeballs, rooted out, are thrown to ground;
His nose dismantled, in his mouth is found;
His jaws, cheeks, front, one undistinguish'd wound.
Dryden.

To DISMANTLE. v. a. [dis and mantle.] To divest of a mask; to uncover from concealment.

Fair ladies mask'd, are roses in the bud;
Or angels veil'd in clouds: are roses blown,
Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture shewn.
Shakespeare.

The marquis thought best to dismask his beard;
and told him that he was going covertly. Wotton.

To DISMAY. v. a. [desmayor, Spanish.] To terrify; to discourage; to affright; to depress; to deject.

Their mighty strokes their habergeons dismay'd.

TO DISPLEASE. v. n. To disgust; to raise aversion.

Foul fights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things, than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul fights do not much offend.
Bacon's Natural History.

Your extreme fondness was perhaps as displeas- ing to God before, as now your extreme affliction.
Temple.

Sweet and stinking commonly serve our turn for those ideas, which, in effect, is little more than to call them pleasing or displeasing; though the smell of a rose and violet, both sweet, are certainly very distinct ideas. Locke.

DISPLEASINGNESS. n. f. [from displeasing.]
Offensiveness; quality of offending.

It is a mistake to think that men cannot change
the displeasingness or indifference, that is in ac-

I know no employment for which piety disqualifies.

Swift.

My common illness utterly disqualifies me for all conversation; I mean my deafness.

Swift.

3. To deprive a right or claim by some positive restriction; to disable; to except from any grant. Swift has from.

The church of England is the only body of Christians which disqualifies those, who are employed to preach its doctrine, from sharing in the civil power, farther than as senators.

Swift on the Sacramental Test.

TO DISQUALITY. v. a. [dis and quantity.] To lessen; to diminish. Not used.

Be entreated of fifty to disquantity your train; And the remainders that shall still depend, To be such men as may befall your age.

Shakespeare.

DISQUIET. n. f. [dis and quiet.] Uneasiness; restlessness; want of tranquillity; vexation; disturbance; anxiety.

He that, upon a true principle, lives without any disquiet or thought, may be said to be happy.

L'Estrange.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet.

Tillotson.

I had rather live in Ireland than under the frequent disquiets of hearing you are out of order.

Swift.

DISQUIET. adj. Unquiet; uneasy; restless.

I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet;

The meat was well if you were so content. Shak.

TO DISQUIET. v. a. [from the noun.] To disturb; to make uneasy; to harass; to vex; to fret; to deprive of tranquillity.

The proud Roman him disquieted. Fairy Queen.

Why art thou so vexed, O my soul? And why art thou so disquieted within me?

Psalms.

By anger and impatience the mind is disquieted, and is not able easily to compose itself to prayer.

Duppa.

Thou, happy creature, art secure

From all the torments we endure;

Despair, ambition, jealousy,

Lost friends, nor love disquiets thee. Ro. common.

DISQUIETER. n. f. [from disquiet.] A disturber; a harasser.

DISQUIETLY. adv. [from disquiet.] Without rest; anxiously; uneasily; without calmness.

Treachery, and all ruinous disorders follow us disquietly to our graves. Shakespeare's King Lear.

He rested disquietly that night; but in the morning I found him calm.

Wisdman.

DISQUIETNESS. n. f. [from disquiet.] Uneasiness; restlessness; anxiety; disturbance.

All otherwise, said he, I riches rede,

And deem them root of all disquietness. Fairy Q.

defenders; whereupon much disquietness ensued.

Hooker.

DISQUIETUDE. n. f. [from disquiet.] Uneasiness; anxiety; disturbance; want of tranquillity.

Little happiness attends a great character, and to a multitude of disquietudes the desire of it subjects an ambitious mind. Addison's Spectator.

'Tis the best preservative from all those temporal fears and disquietudes, which corrupt the enjoyment, and embitter the lives of men.

Rogers.

DISQUISITION. n. f. [disquisitio, Latin.] Examination; disputative enquiry.

God hath reserved many things to his own resolution, whose determinations we cannot hope from flesh; but with reverence must suspend unto that great day, whose justice shall either condemn our curiosity, or resolve our disquisitions.

Brown.

'Tis indeed the proper place for this disquisition concerning the antediluvian earth.

Woodward's Natural History.

The royal society had a good effect, as it turned many of the greatest geniuses of that age to the disquisitions of natural knowledge. Addison's Spect.

The nature of animal diet may be discovered by taste, and other sensible qualities, and some general rules, without particular disquisition upon every kind. Arbutnot.

TO DISRA'NK. v. a. [dis and rank.] To degrade from his rank.

Ditt.

DISREGARD. n. f. [dis and regard.] Sight notice; neglect; contempt.

TO DISREGARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To slight; to neglect; to contemn.

Since we are to do good to the poor, to strangers, to enemies, those whom nature is too apt to make us despise, disregard, or hate, then undoubtedly we are to do good to all. Spratt.

Those fasts which God hath disregarded hitherto,

he may for the time to come. Smalbridge.

Studious of good, man disregarded fame,

And useful knowledge was his eldest aim. Blackm.

With hatefullest disrelish, writh'd their jaws,

With foot and cinders fill'd. Milton.

2. Dislike of the palate; squeamishness.

Bread or tobacco may be neglected, where they are shewn not to be useful to health, because of an indifference or disrelish to them.

Locke.

TO DISRE'LISTH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make nauseous; to infect with an unpleasant taste.

Fruits of taste to please

True appetite, and not disrelish thirst

Of nectarous droughts between, from milky stream. Milton.

The fame anxiety and solicitude that embittered

the pursuit, disrelishes the fruition itself. Rogers.

2. To want a taste of; to dislike.

The world is become too busy for me: every body is so concerned for the publick, that all private enjoyments are lost, or disrelished. Pope.

DISREPUTATION. n. f. [dis and reputation.]

1. Disgrace; dishonour.

I will tell you what was the course in the happy days of queen Elizabeth, whom it is no disreputa-tion to follow. Bacon.

2. Loss of reputation; ignominy.

The king fearing least that the bad successes might discourage his people, and bring disreputa-tion to himself, forbade any report to be made.

Hayward.

Gluttony is not of so great disreputation amongst men as drunkenness. Taylor's Rule of living body.

DISREPUTE. n. f. [dis and reputet.] Ill character; dishonour; want of reputation.

How studiously did they cast a slur upon the king's person, and bring his governing principles

under a disrepute. South.

DISRESPECT. n. f. [dis and respect.] Incivility;

want of reverence; irreverence; an agst approaching to rudeness.

Any disrespect to acts of state, or to the persons of statesmen, was in no time more penal. Claren.

Aristotle writ a methodical discourse concerning these arts, chusing a certain benefit before the hazard that might accrue from the vain disrespect of ignorant persons. Wilkins.

What is more usual to warriors than impatience of bearing the least affront or disrespect?

Pope.

DISRESPECTFUL. adj. [disrespect and full.]

Irreverent; uncivil.

DISRESPECTFULLY. adv. [from disrespectfuh.]

Irreverently; uncivilly.

We cannot believe our posterity will think so disrespectfully of their great grandmothers, as that they made themselves monstrous to appear amiable. Addison's Spectator.

TO DISROBE. v. a. [dis and robe.] To undress;

to uncover; to strip.

Thus when they had the witch disrobed quite,

And all her filthy feature open shewn,

They let her go at will, and wander ways unknown. Spenser.

Kill the villain trait,

Disrobe him of the matchless monument,

Thy father's triumph o'er the savages.

Shakespeare's King John.

These two great peers were disrobed of their glory, the one by judgment, the other by violence.

Wotton.

Who will be prevailed with to disrobe himself at once of all his old opinions, and pretences to knowledge and learning, and turn himself out stark naked in quest afresh of new notions?

Locke.

DISRUPTION. n. f. [disruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking asunder.

This secures them from disruption, which they would be in danger of, upon a sudden stretch or contortion. Ray.

2. Breach; rent; dilaceration.

The agent which effected this disruption, and dislocation of the strata, was seated within the earth. Woodward.

If raging winds invade the atmosphere,

Their force its curious texture cannot tear,

Nor make disruption in the threads of air.

Blackmore.

DISSATISFACTION. n. f. [dis and satisfaction.]

The state of being dissatisfied; discontent; want of something to complete the wish.

Ho.

He that changes his condition, out of impatience and dissatisfaction, when he has tried a new one, wishes for his old again. L'Estrange.

The ambitious man has little happiness, but is subject to much uneasiness and dissatisfaction. Addison's Spectator.

In vain we try to remedy the defects of our acquisition, by varying the object: the same dissatisfaction pursues us through the circle of created goods. Rogers.

DISSATISFACTORINESS. n. f. [from dissatisfaction.] Inability to give content.

DISSATISFACTORY. adj. [from dissatisfaction.] That which is unable to give content.

To DISSATISFY. v. a. [dis and satisfy.]

1. To discontent; to displease.
The advantages of life will not hold out to the length of desire; and, since they are not big enough to satisfy, they should not be big enough to dissatisfy. Collier.

2. To fail to please; to offend by the want of something requisite.

I still retain some of my notions, after your lordship's having appeared dissatisfied with them. Locke.

To DISSECT. v. a. [disseco, Latin.]

1. To cut in pieces. It is used chiefly of anatomical enquiries, made by separation of the parts of animal bodies.

No mask, no trick, no favour, no reserve; Dissect your mind, examine every nerve. Roscommon.

Following life in creatures we dissect,
We lose it in the moment we detect. Pope.

2. To divide and examine minutely.
This paragraph, that has not one ingenuous word throughout, I have dissected for a sample. Atterbury.

DISSECTION. n. f. [dissectio, Latin.]

1. The act of separating the parts of animal bodies; anatomy.

She cut her up; but, upon the dissection, found her just like other hens. L'Estrange.

I shall enter upon the dissection of a coquet's heart, and communicate that curious piece of anatomy. Addison.

2. Nice examination.

Such strict enquiries into nature, so true and so perfect a dissection of human kind, is the work of extraordinary diligence. Granville.

To DISSEIZE. v. a. [disseizer, French.] To dispossess; to deprive. It is commonly used of a legal act.

He so dissized of his gripping grofs,
The knight his thrilant spear again assay'd,
In his brags-plated body to embois. Fairy Queen.

If a prince should give a man, besides his ancient patrimony, which his family had been dispossessed of, an additional estate, never before in the possession of his ancestors, he could not be said to re-establish lineal succession. Locke.

DISSEIZIN. n. f. [from disseizer, French.] An unlawful dispossessing a man of his land, tenement, or other immoveable or incorporeal right. Cowell.

DISSEIZOR. n. f. [from disseizer.] He that dispossesses another.

To DISSEMBLE. v. a. [dissembla, Latin; femblance; dissimulatio, and probably dissimulatio, in old French.]

1. To hide under false appearance; to conceal; to pretend that not to be which really is.

She answered, that her soul was God's; and touching her faith, as the could not change, so she would not dissemble it. Hayward.

2. To pretend that to be which is not. This is not the true signification.

Your son Lucentio
Doth love my daughter, and the loveth him,
Or both dissemble deeply their affections. Shakespeare.

In vain, on the dissimul'd mother's tongue,
Had cunning art and fly persuasion hung;
And real care in vain, and native love
In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.

To DISSEMBLE. v. n.

1. To play the hypocrite; to use false professions; to wheedle.

Ye dissimul'd in your hearts when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, Pray for us. Jeremiah, xlii. 20.

I would dissimul with my nature, were my fortunes, and my friends, at stake requir'd I should do so in honour. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thy function too will varnish o'er our arts, And sanctify dissimul. Roswell's Ambitious Stepmother.

2. Shakespeare uses it for fraudulent; unperforming.

I am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissimul nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shakespeare's Richard III.

DISSEMBLER. n. f. [from dissimul.] An hypocrite; a man who conceals his true disposition. Thou dost wrong me, thou dissimul, thou. Shakespeare.

The French king, in the business of peace, was the greater dissimul of the two. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such an one, whose virtue forbiddeth him to be bafe and a dissimul, shall evermore hang under the wheel. Raleigh.

The queen, with rage inflam'd,
Thus greets him, Thou dissimul, wouldst thou fly Out of my arms by stealth? Denham.

Men will trust no farther than they judge a person for sincerity fit to be trusted: a discovered dissimul can achieve nothing great and considerable. South.

DISSEMBLINGLY. adv. [from dissimul.] With dissimulation; hypocritically.

They might all have been either dissimulingly spoken, or falsely reported of the equity of the barbarous king. Knolles.

To DISSEMINATE. v. a. [from disseminatio, Latin.] To scatter as seed; to sow; to spread every way.

Ill uses are made of it many times in stirring up seditions, rebellions, in disseminating of heresies, and infusing of prejudices. Hammond's Fundamentals.

There is a nearly uniform and constant fire or heat disseminated through the body of the earth. Woodward.

The Jews are indeed disseminated through all the trading parts of the world. Addison's Spectator.

By firmness of mind, and freedom of speech, the gospel was disseminated at first, and mult still be maintained. Atterbury.

DISSEMINATION. n. f. [disseminatio, Latin.] The act of scattering like seed; the act of sowing or spreading.

Though now at the greatest distance from the beginning of error, yet we are almost lost in its dissemination, whose ways are boundless, and confess no subscription. Brown.

DISSEMINATOR. n. f. [disseminator, Latin.] He that scatters; a scatterer; a sower; a spreader.

Men, vehemently thirsting after a name in the world, hope to acquire it by being the disseminators of novel doctrines. Decay of Piety.

DISSENSION. n. f. [dissentio, Latin.] Disagreement; strife; discord; contention; difference; quarrel; breach of union.

Friend now, fast sworn,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, whose exercise,

Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love, Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,
That no dissension hinder government. Shakespeare.

He appeased the dissension then arising about religion. Knolles.

Grown
In wealth and multitude, factious they grow;
But first among the priests dissension springs. Milton.

Debates, dissensions, uproars are thy joy;
Provok'd without offence, and practis'd to destroy. Dryden.

DISSENSIOUS. adj. [from dissension.] Disposed to discord; quarrelsome; factious; contentious.

Either in religion they have a dissensious head, or in the commonwealth a factious head. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Who are they that complain unto the king
That I am stern? They love his grace but lightly, That fill his ears with such dissensious rumours. Shakespeare.

You dissensious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To DISSENT. v. n. [dissentio, Latin.]

1. To disagree in opinion; to think in a contrary manner.

Let me not be any occasion to defraud the publick of what is best, by any morose or perverse dissentings. King Charles.

What cruelty of heathens has not been matched by the inhumanity of dissenting Christians! Decay of Piety.

There are many opinions in which multitudes of men dissent from us, who are as good and wise as ourselves. Addison.

2. To differ; to be of a contrary nature.

We see a general agreement in the secret opinion of men, that every man ought to embrace the religion which is true, and to shun, as hurtful, whatever dissenteth from it, but that most which doth farthest dissent. Hooker.

3. To differ from the established church.

How will dissenting brethren relish?
What will malignants say? Hudibras.

DISSENT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disagreement; difference of opinion; declaration of difference of opinion.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are grounds to suspect that there is proof as considerable to be produced on the contrary side; there suspense or dissent are voluntary actions. Locke.

What could be the reason of this general dissent from the notion of the resurrection, seeing that almost all of them did believe the immortality of the soul? Bentley's Sermons.

2. Contrariety of nature; opposite quality. Not in use.

The dissents of the menstrual or strong waters may hinder the incorporation, as well as the dissent of the metals. Therefore where the menstrua are the same, and yet the incorporation followeth not, the dissent is in the metals. Bacon.

DISSENTANEOUS. adj. [from dissent.] Disagreeable; inconsistent; contrary.

DISSENTER. n. f. [from dissent.]

1. One that disagrees, or declares his disagreement from an opinion.

They will admit of matter of fact, and agree with dissenters in that; but differ only in assigning of reasons. Locke.

2. One who, for whatever reasons, refuses the communion of the English church.

DISSERTATION. n. f. [dissertatio, Latin.] A discourse; a disquisition; a treatise.

Plutarch, in his dissertation upon the poets, quotes an instance of Homer's judgment in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction. Bryce on the Odyssey.

To DISSEVER. v. a. [dis and serve.] To do injury to; to mischief; to damage; to hurt; to harm.

Having never done the king the least service, he took the first opportunity to disserve him, and engaged against him from the beginning of the rebellion. Clarendon.

Desires of things of this world, by their tendency, promote or disserve our interests in another. Reverend.

DISSEVERANCE. n. f. [dis and service.] Injury; mischief; ill turn.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any disservice unto relaters who have well deserved. Brown.

Great sicknesses make a sensible alteration, but smaller indispositions do a proportionable disservice. Collier.

DIS

DISSE'RVICABLE. adj. [from differve.] Injurious; mischievous; hurtful.

DISSE'RVICABLENESS. n. f. [from differveable.] Injury; harm; hurt; mischief; damage.

All action being for some end, and not the end itself, its aptness to be commanded or forbidden must be founded upon its serviceableness or differveableness to some end.

To DISSE'TTLE. v. a. [dis and settle.] To unsettle; to unfix.

To DISSE'VER. v. a. [dis and sever.] In this word the particle dis makes no change in the signification, and therefore the word, though supported by great authorities, ought to be ejected from our language. To part in two; to break; to divide; to sunder; to separate; to disunite.

Shortly had the storm dissevered the company, which the day before had tarried together, that most of them never met again, but were swallowed up.

The dissevering of fleets hath been the overthrow of many actions.

All downright rains dissever the violence of outrageous winds, and level the mountainous billows.

Dissever your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again.

The meeting points the sacred hair dissever
From the fair head, for ever and for ever.

DISSE'VANCE. n. f. [disse, Latin.] The act of starting asunder.

DISSE'VIENT. adj. [disse, Latin.] Starting asunder; bursting in two.

DISSE'VITION. n. f. [disse, Latin.] The act of bursting in two; the act of starting different ways.

The air having much room to receive motion, the disse of that air was great.

DISSE'MILAR. adj. [dis and similar.] Unlike; heterogeneous.

Simple oil is reduced into disse parts, and yields a sweet oil, very differing from fallet-oil.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and those whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and disse.

If the fluid be supposed to consist of heterogeneous particles, we cannot conceive how those disse parts can have a like situation.

DISSE'MILARITY. n. f. [from disse.] Unlikeness; dissimilitude.

If the principle of reunion has not its energy in this life, whenever the attractions of sense cease, the acquired principles of disse must repel these beings from their centre; so that the principle of reunion, being set free by death, must drive these beings towards God their centre, and the principle of disse forcing him to repel them with infinite violence from him, must make them infinitely miserable.

DISSE'MILITUDE. n. f. [disse, Latin.] Unlikeness; want of resemblance.

Thereupon grew marvellous disse, and by reason thereof jealousies, heartburnings, jars, and discords.

We doubt whether the Lord, in different circumstances, did frame his people unto any utter disse; either with Egyptians, or any other nation.

The disse between the Divinity and images, shews that images are not a suitable means whereby to worship God.

As humane society is founded in the similitude of some things, so it is promoted by some certain disse.

Women are curious observers of the likeness of children to parents, that they may, upon finding disse, have the pleasure of hinting unchastity.

DISSE'MULATION. n. f. [disse, Latin.] The act of dissembling; hypocrisy; fallacious appearance; false pretensions.

Disse is but a faint kind of policy; for it asketh a strong wit, and a strong heart, to know when to tell truth, and to do it.

He added not; and Satan, bowing low
His grey disse, disappear'd
Into thin air diffus'd.

Disse may be taken for a bare concealment of one's mind, in which sense we commonly say, that it is prudence to dissemble injuries.

DI'SSIPABLE. adj. [from dissipate.] Easily scattered; liable to dispersion.

The heat of those plants is very dissipable, which under the earth is contained and held in; but when it cometh to the air it exaleth.

The parts of plants are very tender, as consisting of corpuscles which are extremely small and light, and therefore the more easily dissipable.

To DI'SSIPATE. v. a. [dissipatus, Latin.]

1. To scatter every way; to disperse.

The heat at length grows so great, that it again dissipates and bears off those corpuscles which it brought.

It is covered with skin and hair to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retard the edge of any weapon.

The circling mountains eddy in,
From the bare wild, the dissipated storm.

2. To scatter the attention.

This slavery to his passions produced a life irregular and dissipated.

3. To spend a fortune.

The wherry that contains
Of dissipated wealth the poor remains.

DISSIPATION. n. f. [dissipatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dispersion.

The effects of heat are most advanced when it worketh upon a body without loss or dissipation of the matter.

Abraham was contemporary with Paleg, in whose time the famous dissipation of mankind, and distinction of languages happened.

2. The state of being dispersed.

Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout.
Where the earth contains nitre within it, if that heat which is continually steaming out of the earth be preserved, its dissipation prevented, and the cold kept off by some building, this alone is ordinarily sufficient to raise up the nitre.

3. Scattered attention.

I have begun two or three letters to you by snatches, and been prevented from finishing them by a thousand avocations and dissipations.

To DISSOCIATE. v. a. [dissocio, Latin.] To separate; to disunite; to part.

In the dissociating action, even of the gentlest fire, upon a concrete, there perhaps vanish some active and fugitive particles, whose presence was requisite to contain the concrete under such a determinate form.

DISSOLVABLE. adj. [from dissolve.] Capable of dissolution; liable to be melted.

Such things as are not dissolvable by the moisture of the tongue, act not upon the taste.

DISSOLUBLE. adj. [dissolubilis, Latin.] Capable of separation; having one part separable from another by heat or moisture.

Nodules, reposed in cliffs amongst the earth, being hard and not so dissoluble, are left behind.

DISSOLUBILITY. n. f. [from dissoluble.] Liability to suffer a disunion of parts by heat or moisture; capacity of being dissolved.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of alteration, or corruption, from the dissolubility of their parts, and the coalition of several particles endued with contrary and destructive qualities each to other.

To DISSOLVE. v. a. [dissolve, Latin.]

1. To destroy the form of any thing by disuniting the parts with heat or moisture; to melt; to liquefy.

I have heard of anchovies dissolved in sauce.

The whole terrestrial globe was taken all to pieces, and dissolved at the deluge.

2. To break; to disunite in any manner.

Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be?

3. To loose; to break the ties of any thing.

Down fell the duke, his joints dissolv'd afunder,
Blind with the light, and stricken dead with wonder.

Witness these ancient empires of the earth,
In height of all their flowing wealth dissolv'd.

The commons live, by no divisions rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government.

4. To separate persons united; as, to dissolve a league.

She and I long since contracted,
Are now so sure that nothing can dissolve us.

5. To break up assemblies.

By the king's authority alone, and by his writs, parliaments are assembled; and by him alone they are prorogued and dissolved, but each house may adjourn itself.

6. To solve; to clear.

And I have heard of thee, that thou can't make interpretations and dissolve doubts.

7. To break an enchantment.

Highly it concerns his glory now
To frustrate and dissolve the magick spells.

8. To be relaxed by pleasure.

Angels dissolv'd in hallelujahs lye.

To DISSOLVE. v. n.

1. To be melted; to be liquefied.

All putrefaction, if it dissolve not in rarefaction, will in the end issue into plants or living creatures bred of putrefaction.

As wax dissolves, as ice begins to run
And trickle into drops before the sun,
So melts the youth, and languishes away.

2. To sink away; to fall to nothing.

If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;
For I am almost ready to dissolve.

3. To melt away in pleasures.

DISSOLVENT. adj. [from dissolve.] Having the power of dissolving or melting.

In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the spittle, is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, where, being mingled with dissolvent juices, it is concocted, macerated, and reduced into a chyle.

DISSOLVENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] That which has the power of disuniting the parts of any thing.

Spittle is a great dissolvent, and there is a great quantity of it in the stomach, being swallowed constantly.

DISSOLVER. n. f. [from dissolve.] That which has the power of dissolving.

Fire, and the more subtle dissolver, putrefaction, by dividing the particles of substances, turn them black.

Hot mineral waters are the best dissolvers of phlegm.

DISSOLVIBLE. adj. [from dissolve.] It is commonly written dissoluble, but less properly. Liable to perish by dissolution.

Man, that is even upon the intrinsic constitution of his nature dissoluble, must, by being in an eternal duration continue immortal.

DISSOLUTE. adj. [dissolutus, Latin.] Loose; wanton; unrestrained; dissolved in pleasures; luxurious; debauched.

A giant huge and tall,
Who him disarm'd, dissolute, dismay'd,
Unawares surpriz'd.

DIS

Such stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;
While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honour, to support
So diffolute a crew. Shak.peare's Richard II.
A man of little gravity, or abstinence in pleasures; yea, sometimes almost diffolute. Hayward.
They cool'd in zeal,

Thenceforth shall practise how to live secure,
Worldly, or diffolute, on what their lords
Shall leave them to enjoy. Milton.
The true spirit of religion banishes indeed all levity of behaviour, all vicious and diffolute mirth;
but, in exchange, fills the mind with a perpetual serenity. Addison's Spectator.

The beauty of religion the most diffolute are forced to acknowledge. Rogers.

DISSOLUTELY. adv. [from diffolute.] Loosely;
in debauchery; without restraint.

Whereas men have lived diffolutely and unrighteously, thou hast tormented them with their own abominations. Wisdow.

DISSOLUTENESS. n. f. [from diffolute.] Looseness; laxity of manners; debauchery.

If we look into the common management, we shall have reason to wonder, in the great diffoluteness of manners which the world complains of, that there are any footsteps at all left of virtue. Locke.

DISSOLUTION. n. f. [diffolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of liquefying by heat or moisture.

2. The state of being liquefied.

3. The state of melting away: liquefaction.

10. Looseness of manners; laxity; remissness; dissipation.

A longing after sensual pleasures is a diffolution of the spirit of a man, and makes it loose, soft, and wandering, unapt for noble or spiritual employments. Bishop Taylor.

Fame makes the mind loose and gayish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of diffolution upon all the faculties. South.

An universal diffolution of manners began to prevail, and a professed disregard to all fixed principles. Asterbury.

DISSONANCE. n. f. [dissonance, Lat. dissonance, French.] A mixture of harsh, unpleasant, unharmonious sounds; unsuitableness of one sound to another.

Still govern thou my song,

But drive far off the barbarous dissonance
Of Bacchus and his revellers. Milton.

The Latin tongue is a dead language, and none can decide with confidence on the harmony or dissonance of the numbers of these times.

Garth's Preface to Ovid.

DISSONANT. adj. [dissonans, Latin.]

1. Harsh; unharmonious.

Dire were the strain, and dissonant to sing
The cruel raptures of the savage kind. Tomson.

2. Incongruous; disagreeing: with from.

What can be more dissonant from reason and nature, than that a man, naturally inclined to clemency, should shew himself unkind and inhuman. Hakewill on Providence.

3. With to: less properly.

When conscience reports any thing dissonant to truth, it obliges no more than the falsehood reported by it. South.

TO DISSUADE. v. a. [dissuadeo, Latin.]

1. To dehort; to divert by reason or importunity from any thing.

We submit to Cæsar, promising
To pay our wonted tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked queen.

Shak.peare's Cymbeline.

2. To represent any thing as unfit or dangerous.

This would be worse;

War therefore, open or conceal'd, alike
My voice dissuades. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not dissident of thee, do I dissuade

Thy absence from my fight. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I'd fain deny this with, which thou hast made;

Or, what I can't deny, would fain dissuade. Addison.

DISSUADE. n. f. [from dissuade.] He that dissuades.

DISSUASION. n. f. [dissuasio, Latin.] Urgency of reason or importunity against any thing; dehortation.

DISSUASIVE. n. f. Dehortation; argument or importunity employed to turn the mind off from any purpose or pursuit.

The meanness, or the sin, will scare be dissuasive to those who have reconciled themselves to both.

Government of the Tongue.

TO DISSUADER. v. a. [dis and funder.] This is a barbarous word. See DISSEVER. To funder; to separate.

But when her draught the sea and earth dissunder'd,

The troubl'd bottoms turn'd up, and the thunder'd. Chapman.

DISSYLLABLE. n. f. [δισσύλλαβος.] A word of two syllables.

No man is tied, in modern poetry, to observe any farther rule in the feet of his verse, but that they be dissyllables; whether spondee, trochee, or iambique, it matters not. Dryden.

DI'STAFF. n. f. [διστάξ, Saxon.]

1. The staff from which the flax is drawn in spinning.

In sum, proud Boreas never ruled fleet,
Who Neptune's web on danger's distaff spins.

With greater power than she did make them wend

Each way, as she that ages praise did bend. Sidney.

Weave thou to end this web which I begin;
I will the distaff hold, come thou and spin.

Fairfax.

Ran Coll our dog, and Talbot with the band,
And Malkin, with her distaff in her hand. Dryden.

2. It is used as an emblem of the female sex. So the French say, The crown of France never falls to the distaff.

Place on their heads that crown distain'd with gore,

Which those dire hands from my slain father tore. Pope.

2. To blot; to fully with infamy. He understood,

That lady whom I had to me assign'd,
Had both distain'd her honourable blood,
And eke the faith which she to me did bind.

Fairy Queen.

The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If he that's prais'd, himself bring the praise forth.

Shak.peare.

Some theologicians defile places erected for religion, by defending oppressions, distaining their professions by publishing odious untruths upon report of others. Sir J. Hayward.

DISTANCE. n. f. [distance, Fr. distancia, Lat.]

1. Distance is space considered barely in length between any two beings, without considering any thing else between them. Locke.

It is very cheap, notwithstanding the great distance between the vineyards and the towns that fell the wine. Addison on Italy.

As he lived but a few miles distance from her father's house, he had frequent opportunities of seeing her. Addison.

2. Remoteness in place. Cæsar is still dispos'd to give us terms,

And waits at distance till he hears from Cato. Addison.

These dwell at such convenient distance,
That each may give his friend assistance. Prior.

3. The space kept between two antagonists in fencing.

We come to see fight; to see thy pass, thy stock, thy reverie, thy distance. Shak.peare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Contrariety; opposition. Banquo was your enemy,

So is he mine; and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my near'th of life. Shak.peare's Macbeth.

5. A space marked on the course where horses run.

This was the horse that ran the whole field out of distance, and won the race. L'Estrange.

6. Space of time. You must do it by distance of time. 2 Edw. v. 47.

I help my preface by a prescript, to tell that there is ten years distance between the one and the other. Prior.

7. Remoteness in time either past or future.

We have as much assurance of these things, as things future and at a distance are capable of.

Titus.

To judge right of blessings prayed for, and yet at a distance, we must be able to know things future. Smalbridge.

8. Ideal disjunction; mental separation.

The qualities that affect our senses are, in the things themselves, so united and blended, that there is no separation, no distance between them. Locke.

9. Respect; distant behaviour.

I hope your modesty
Will know, what distance to the crown is due. Dryden.

'Tis by respect and distance that authority is upheld. Asterbury.

Prosperity is not without many fears and *dis*tastes, and adversity is not without comforts and hopes. Bacon's Essays.

3. Anger; alienation of affection.

Julius Caesar was by acclamation termed king, to try how the people would take it: the people shewed great murmur and *dis*taste at it.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

The king having tasted of the envy of the people, for his imprisonment of Edward Plantagenet, was doubtful to heap up any more *dis*tastes of that kind by the imprisonment of De la Pole also.

Bacon's Henry VII.

On the part of Heaven,
Now alienated, distance, and *dis*taste,
And just rebuke. Milton's Paradise Lost.

With stern *dis*taste avow'd,
To their own districts drive the suitor crowd.

Pope's Odyssey.

To Di'sTASTE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fill the mouth with nauseousness, or disrelish.

Dang'rous conceits are in their nature poisons, which at the first are scarce found to *dis*taste; but with a little act upon the blood, burn like the mines of sulphur. Shakspere's Othello.

2. To dislike; to loath.

I'd have it come to question;

If he *dis*taste it, let him to my sister.

Shakspere's King Lear.

I am unwilling to believe that he doth it with a design to play tricks, and fly-blow my words to make others *dis*taste them. Stirlingfleet.

3. To offend; to disgust.

I thought it no policy to *dis*taste the English or Irish by a course of reformation, but fought to please them. Davies.

4. To vex; to exasperate; to frown.

The whistling of the winds is better music to contented minds, than the opera to the spleenful, ambitious, diseased, *dis*tafled, and distracted souls. Pope.

Di'sTASTEFUL. adj. [*dis*taste and full.]

1. Nauseous to the palate; disgusting.

What to one palate is sweet and delicious, to another is odious and *dis*taste-ful. Glanville's Sceptis.

2. Offensive; unpleasing.

The visitation, though somewhat *dis*taste-ful to the Irish lords, was sweet and welcome to the common people. Davies.

None but a fool *dis*taste-ful truth will tell;
So it be new and please, 'tis full as well. Dryden.

*Dis*taste-ful humours, and whatever else may render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another, are forbidden in the New Testament. Tillotson.

3. Malignant; malevolent.

After *dis*taste-ful looks,
With certain half-caps, and cold moving nods,
They froze me into silence. Shakspere's Timon.

shell-fish which lie perpetually concealed in the deep, screened from our sight.

3. He that enters deep into knowledge or study.

He would have him, as I conceive it, to be no superficial and floating artificer; but a diver into causes, and into the mysteries of proportion.

To DIVERGE. v. n. [diverge, Latin.] To tend various ways from one point.

Homogeneous rays, which flow from several points of any object, and fall perpendicularly on any reflecting surface, shall afterwards diverge from so many points.

DIVERGENT. adj. [from divergens, Lat.] Tending to various parts from one point.

DIVERS. adj. [diversus, Latin.] Several; sundry; more than one. It is now grown out of use.

We have divers examples in the church of such as, by fear, being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, repented, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel.

The teeth breed when the child is a year and a half old: then they cast them, and new ones come about seven years; but divers have backward teeth come at twenty, some at thirty and forty.

Divers letters were shot into the city with arrows, wherein Solymans councils were revealed.

Divers friends thought it strange, that a white dry body should acquire a rich colour, upon the effusion of spring-water.

DIVERSE. adj. [diversus, Latin.]

1. Different from another.

Four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another.

2. Different from itself; various; multiform; diffused.

Eloquence is a great and diverse thing, nor did she yet ever favour any man so much as to be wholly his.

3. In different directions. It is little used but in the last sense.

The gourd
And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly
Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep

Diverse, detesting contact.

To seize his papers, Curl, was next thy care;
His papers light, fly diverse toft in air.

DIVERSIFICATION. n. f. [from diversify.]

1. The act of changing forms or qualities.

If you consider how variously several things may be compounded, you will not wonder that such fruitful principles, or manners of diversification, should generate different colours.

2. Variation; variegation.

3. Variety of forms; multiformity.

4. Change; alteration.

This which is here called a change of will, is not a change of his will, but a change in the object, which seems to make a diversification of the will, but indeed is the same will diversified.

To DIVERSIFY. v. a. [diversifier, French.]

1. To make different from another; to distinguish; to discriminate.

There may be many species of spirits, as much separated and diversified one from another as the species of sensible things are distinguished one from another.

Male souls are diversified with so many characters, that the world has not variety of materials sufficient to furnish out their different inclinations.

It was easier for Homer to find proper sentiments for Grecian generals, than for Milton to diversify his infernal council with proper characters.

2. To make different from itself; to vary; to variegate.

The country being diversified between hills and dales, woods and plains, one place more clear, another more darksome, it is a pleasant picture.

There

There is, in the producing of some species, a composition of matter, which may be much diversified. Bacon.

DIVERSION, n. f. [from divert.]

1. The act of turning any thing off from its course. Cutting off the tops, and pulling off the buds, work retention of the sap for a time, and diversion of it to the sprouts that were not forward. Bacon's Natural History

I have ranked this diversion of Christian practice among the effects of our contentions. Decay of Piety.

You for those ends whole days in council sit, And the diversions of your youth forget. Waller.

In the book of games and diversions, the reader's mind may be supposed to be relaxed.

Such productions of wit and humour as expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions to readers. Addison's Freeholder.

4. [in war.] The act or purpose of drawing the enemy off from some design, by threatening or attacking a distant part.

DIVERSITY, n. f. [diversité, French, from diversitas, Latin.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; unlikeness. Then is there in this diversity no contrariety. Hooker.

They cannot be divided, but they will prove opposite; and not resting into a bare diversity, rise into a contrariety. South.

The most common diversity of human constitutions arises from the solid parts, as to their different degrees of strength and tension. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Variety.

The diversity of ceremonies in this kind ought not to cause dissention in churches. Hooker.

Society cannot subsist without a diversity of factions; and if God should grant every one a middle station, he would defeat the very scheme of happiness proposed in it. Rogers.

3. Distinct being; not identity.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

4. Variegation.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display, Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

DIVERSLY, adv. [from diverse.]

1. In different ways; differently; variously. The lack we all have as well of ghostly, as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known; but the gifts of God are so diversely bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive: what all stand in need of seldom lieth hid. Hooker.

Both of them do diversely work, as they have their medium diversely disposed. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Whether the king did permit it to save his purse, or to communicate the envy of a business, displeasing to his people, was diversely interpreted. Bacon.

Leicester bewrayed a desire to plant him in the queen's favour, which was diversely interpreted by such as thought that great artizan of courts to do nothing by chance, nor much by affection. Wotton.

The universal matter, which Moses comprehendeth under the names of heaven and earth, is by divers diversely understood. Raleigh's History.

William's arm Could nought avail, however fam'd in war; Nor armies leagu'd, that diversely assaid To curb his power. Philips.

2. Excellence in the supreme degree.

By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,

An earthly paragon: behold divineness

No elder than a boy. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

DIVINER. n. f. [from To divine.]

1. One that professes divination, or the art of revealing occult things by supernatural means.

This drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, called me Dromio, and swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

Expelled his oracles, and common temples of delusion, the devil runs into corners, exercising meaner trumperies, and acting his deceits in witches, magicians, diviners, and such inferior seducers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Conjecturer; guesser.

If he himself be conscious of nothing he then thought on, he must be a notable diviner of thoughts that can assure him that he was thinking. Locke.

DIVINERESS. n. f. [from diviner.] A prophetess; a woman professing divination.

The mad divineress had plainly writ,
A time should come, but many ages yet,
In which sinister destinies ordain,
A dame should drown with all her feather'd train. Dryden.

DIVINITY. n. f. [divinité, French; from divinitas, Latin.]

1. Participation of the nature and excellence of God; deity; godhead.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

When he attributes divinity to other things than God, it is only a divinity by way of participation. Stillingfleet.

2. God; the Deity; the Supreme Being; the Cause of causes.

'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison.

3. False god.

Vain idols, deities that ne'er before
In Israel's lands had fix'd their dire abodes, Beastly divinities, and groves of Gods. Prior.

4. Celestial being.

God doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cbeys.

5. The science of divine things; theology.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all admiring with an inward wish,
You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakespeare.

Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error. Shakespeare.

DIV

Among hard words I number those which are peculiar to divinity, as it is a science. Swift.

DIVORCE. n. f. [divorce, Fr. from divortium, Latin.]

1. The legal separation of husband and wife.

Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To restore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her,

That

That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperor and Scribonia.

Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

2. Separation: disunion.

Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections in her, from my religion.

King Charles.

These things, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.

4. The cause of any penal separation.

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heav'n. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
To Divorce. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.

2. To force asunder; to separate by violence.

Were it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how the latter is restrained, and not marking the former, to conclude by the latter of them?

Hooker.

The continent and the island were continued together, within mens remembrance, by a drawbridge; but is now divorced by the downfallen cliffs.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

So seem'd her youthful soul not eas'ly forc'd,
Or from so fair, to sweet a feat divorce'd. Waller.

3. To separate from another.

If thou wert not glad,

I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulch'ring on adultress. Shaksp. King Lear.

If so be it were possible, that all other ornaments of mind might be had in their full perfection, nevertheless the mind, that should possess them divorced from piety, could be but a spectacle of commiration.

Hooker.

4. To take away; to put away.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Aerial pasture the lungs with gentle force
Constant embrace by turns, by turns divorce.

Blackmore.

DIVORCEMENT. n. f. [from divorce.] Divorce;

or cause which produces divorce or separation.

Death is the violent estranger of acquaintance,
the eternal divorcer of marriage.

Drummond's Cypr. Grove.

DIURETICK. adj. [diureticus, Gr.] Having the power to provoke urine.

Diuretics are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, that relax the urinary passages: such as relax ought to be tried before such as force and stimulate. Those emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perspiring, and on empty stomachs.

Arbutnot.

Graceful as John, she moderates the reins,
And whistles sweet her diuretick strains. Young.

DIURNAL. adj. [diurnus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the day.

We observe in a day, which is a short year, the greatest heat about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, which is the diurnal solstice; and the same is evident from the thermometer.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Think, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter fere foment. Milton.

2. Constituting the day.

Why does he order the diurnal hours

To leave earth's other part, and rise in ours?

Prior.

3. Performed in a day; daily; quotidian.

The prime orb,

Incredible how swift, hath thither rowl'd

Diurnal.

Milton.

The diurnal and annual revolution of the sun have been, from the beginning of nature, constant, regular, and universally observable by all mankind.

Locke.

DIURNAL. n. f. [journal, Fr.] A journal; a day-book.

DIURNALLY. adv. [from diurnal.] Daily;

needed not suppose of such diurnity.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DIVULGE. v. a. [divulgo, Latin.]

1. To publish; to make publick; to reveal to the world.

Men are better contented to have their commendations suppressed, than the contrary much divulged.

Hooker.

I will pluck the veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page, and divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acteon.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd.

Dryden's Æneid.

You are deprived of the right over your own sentiments, of the privilege of every human creature, to divulge or conceal them.

Pope.

The cabinets of the sick, and the closets of the dead, have been ransacked to publish private letters, and divulge to all mankind the most secret sentiments of friendship.

Pope.

2. To proclaim; to declare by a publick act.

This is true glory and renown, when God,
Looking on th' earth, with approbation marks
The just man, and divulges him through heav'n
To all his angels, who with true applause Recount his praises.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

DIVULGER. n. f. [from divulge.] A publisher;
one that exposes to publick view.

I think not any thing in my letters could tend so much to my reproach, as the odious divulging of them did to the infamy of the divulgers.

King Charles.

DIVULSION. n. f. [divulsio, Latin.] The act of plucking away.

Aristotle, in his Ethicks, takes up the conceit of the beaver, and the divulsion of his testicles.

To DIZEN. v. a. [This word seems corrupted from digit.] To dress; to deck; to rig out. A low word.

Your ladyship lifts up the fash to be seen,
For sure I had dizen'd you out like a queen. Swift.

DIZZARD. n. f. [from dizzy.] A blockhead; a fool.

Dier.

DIZZINESS. n. f. [from dizzy.] Giddiness;
whirl in the head.

Fixed feriousness heats the brain in some to distraction, and causeth an aching and dizziness in fonder heads.

Glanville.

DIZZY. adj. [δις, δις, Saxon.]

1. Giddy; vertiginous; having in the head the sensation of turning round.

All on a sudden miserable pain

Surpriz'd thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swam
In darkness. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Causing giddiness.

How fearful

And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!

Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Giddy; thoughtless.

What followers, what retinue can't thou gain?
Or at thy heels the dizzy multitude,

Longer than thou can't feed them on thy cost?

Milton.

To DIZZY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To whirl round; to make giddy.

Not the dreadful spout,

Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomed. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

To divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetick of memory.

Shakespeare.

To DO. v. a. Thou dost, he doth or does; preter, did; part. pass. done. [pon, Sax. doen, Dutch.]

1. To practise or act any thing good or bad.

Thou hast done evil above all that were before thee.

1 Kings.

Flee evil, and do good.

Psalms.

2. To perform; to achieve.

They help, who hurt so small;

And he hath nothing done, that doth not all. Daniel.

Learn to live well, that thou may'st die so too;
To live and die is all we have to do.

Denham.

What is the reason a man's arm won't smile and frown, and do all the intellectual postures of the countenance?

Collier.

3. To execute; to discharge.

May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Pindarus is to come,

To do you salutation from his master.

Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

The jury prayed of the senate a guard, that they might do their consciences.

Bacon.

4. To cause. This structure is obsolete.

A fatal plague which many did to dye. Spenser.

Nought can quench mine inly flaming side,
Nor sea of liquor cold, nor lake of mire;

Nothing but death can do me to respire.

Fairy Queen.

5. To transact.

The thing was not done in a corner.

Acts, xxvi. 26.

6. To produce any effect to another.

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waded indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.

Shakespeare.

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

'Tis true, I did so; nor was it in vain:
She did me right, and satisfy'd my vengeance.

Rowe.

You do her too much honour: she hath neither sense nor taste, if she dares to refuse you. Swift.

7. To have recourse to; to practise as the last effort, commonly in the form of a passionate interrogation.

What will ye do in the end thereof? Jer. v. 81.

8. To perform for the benefit or hurt of another.

I know what God will do for me. Sam. xxii. 3.

Acts of mercy done to the poor, shall be accepted and rewarded, as done to our Saviour himself.

Atterbury.

9. To exert; to put forth.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me.

2 Tim. iv. 9.

10. To manage by way of intercourse or dealing; to have business; to deal.

I have been deterred by an indisposition from having much to do with steams of so dangerous a nature.

Boyle.

What had I to do with kings and courts?
My humble lot had cast me far beneath them.

Rowe.

11. To gain; to effect by influence.

It is much, that a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his thouders.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

His queen, notwithstanding she had presented him with divers children, and with a crown also, though he would not acknowledge it, could do nothing with him.

Bacon.

12. To make any thing what it is not.

Off

Off with the crown, and with the crown his head;
And whilst we breathe take him to do him dead.
Shakespeare.

13. To finish; to end.

As for his mercy,
Which he intends for Lear and for Cordelia,
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon.
Shakespeare.
Go to the reading of some part of the New Testament, not carelessly, or in haste, as if you had a mind to have done, but attentively, as to be able to give some account of what you have read.
Duppa.

Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run.
Dryden.

14. To conclude; to settle.

They did their work and din'd.
Prior.
When all is done, there is no man can serve his own interest better than by serving God.
Tillotson.

15. To put.

Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death?
Shakespeare.

The lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

16. This phrase, what to do with, signifies how to bestow: what use to make of; what course to take; how to employ; which way to get rid of.

Men are many times brought to that extremity, that if it were not for God, they would not know what to do with themselves, or how to enjoy themselves for one hour.
Tillotson.

To Do. v. n.

1. To act or behave in any manner well or ill.

Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the Lord, neither do they after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob.
2 Kings.

As every prince should govern as he would desire to be governed, to every subject ought to obey as he would desire to be obeyed, according to the maxim, of doing as we would be done by.
Temple.

2. To make an end; to conclude. This is only in the compound preterite.

You may ramble a whole day, and every moment discover something new; but when you have done, you will have but a confused notion of the place.
Spekator.

3. To cease to be concerned with; to cease to care about; to desist from notice or practice: only in the compound preterite.

No men would make use of disunited parties to destroy one body, unless they were sure to master them when they had done with them.
Stillingfleet.

I have done with Chaucer, when I have answered some objections.
Dryden.

We have not yet done with assenting to propositions at first hearing, and understanding their terms.
Locke.

Having done with such amusements, we give up what we cannot disown.
Pope.

4. To fare; to be with regard to sickness or health.

Good woman, how do'st thou?

—The better that it pleases your good worship to ask.
Shakespeare.

5. To succeed; to fulfill a purpose.

Come, 'tis no matter, we shall do without him.
Adelphon.

You would do well to prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and, if that won't do, challenge the crown.
Collier on Daelling.

6. To deal with.

No man who hath to do with the king, will think himself safe, unless you be his good angel and guide him.
Bacon.

7. To Do is used for any verb to save the repetition of the word; as, I shall come, but if I do not, go away; that is, if I come not.

Thus painters Cupids paint, thus poets do A naked god, blind, young, with arrows too.
Sidney.

If any thing in the world deserves our serious study and consideration, those principles of religion do.
Tillotson.

Take all things which relax the veins; for what does so, prevents too vigorous a motion through the arteries.
Arbutnot.

8. Do is a word of vehement command, or earnest request; as, help me, do; make haste, do.

If thou hast lost thy land, do not also lose thy constancy; and if thou must die a little sooner, yet do not die impatiently.

Taylor's Rule of living Holy.

—Loose me.—I will free thee.

—Do, and I'll be thy slave. Dryden's K. Arthur.

9. To Do is put before verbs sometimes expletively; as I do love, or, I love; or, I loved.

The Turks do acknowledge God the Father, creator of heaven and earth, being the first Person in the Trinity, though they deny the rest.
Bacon's Holy War.

This just reproach their virtue does excite.

Dryden's Æn. id.

Expletives their feeble aid do join.

Pope.

10. Sometimes emphatically; as I do hate him, but will not wrong him.

Perdition catch my soul

But I do love thee; and when I love thee not, Chaos is come again.
Shakespeare's Othello.

11. Sometimes by way of opposition; as, I did love him, but scorn him now.

To DOAT. v. n. See To DOTE.

DO'CIBLE. adj. [docilis, Lat.] Tractable; docile; easy to be taught.

The Asinine feast of fow-thistles and brambles is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most docible age.
Milton.

DO'CIBLENESS. n. f. [from docible.] Teachableness; docility; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble hound, as also of the docibleness of dogs in general.
Walton's Angler.

DO'CILE. adj. [docilis, Lat.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and, being docile and tractable, are very useful.
Ellis's Voyage.

2. With to before the thing taught.

Soon do I to the secret acts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill.
Prior.

DO'CILITY. n. f. [docilitas, Fr. from docilis, Lat.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous.
South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use? the docility of an elephant, and the infatigability of a camel for travelling in deserts.
Grew.

DOCK. n. f. [tocca, Sax.] A plant; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb.
Miller.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckfies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows
Than yon tall dock that rises to thy nose:

Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know,
Love rooted out again will never grow. Swift.

DOCK. n. f.

1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bontius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula.
Grew's Museum.

DOCK. n. f. [As some imagine of dogion.] A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

The boatwain and mariner may bring religion to what dock they please.
Howell.

There are docks for their galleys and men of war, as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations.
Addison.

To DOCK. v. a. [from dock, a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.

2. To cut any thing short.

One or two stood constant centry, who docked all favours handed down; and spread a huge invincible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass.
Swift's Examiner.

3. To cut off a reckoning; to cut off an entail.

4. To lay the ship in a dock.

DO'CKET. n. f. A direction tied upon goods; a summary of a larger writing.
Dist.

DOCTOR. n. f. [doctor, Latin.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physic. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman had it but a civil doctor,
Who did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring. Shakespeare's Mer. of Venice.

There stood up one in the council, a pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws. Acts v. 34.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scriptures made their pride,
Cafuists, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes.
Denham.

Each profelyte would vote his doctor best,
With absolute exclusion to the rest. Dryden.

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases.

By medicine life may he prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

How does your patient, doctor?

—Not so sick, my lord,

As he is troubl'd with thick coming fancies.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother.
Government of the Tongue.

To 'pothecaries let the learn'd prescribe,
That men may die without a double bribe:
Let them, but under their superiors, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.
Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest.
Collier.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution while such a one happened to be the doctor.
Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school.
Digby of Bodies.

To DOCTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To physick; to cure; to treat with medicines. A low word.

DOCTORAL. adj. [doctoralis, Lat.] Relating to the degree of a doctor.

DOCTORALLY. adv. [from doctoral.] In manner of a doctor.

The physicians resorted to him to touch his pulse, and consider of his disease doctorally at their departure.
Hakewill.

DOCTORSHIP. n. f. [from doctor.] The rank of a doctor.

From a scholar he became a fellow, and then the president of the college, after he had received all the graces and degrees, the proctorship and the doctorship.
Clarendon.

DOCTRINAL. adj. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught.

The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject. South.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching. To this end the word of God no otherwise serveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument.
Hooker.

What special property or equality is that, which being no where found but in sermons, maketh them them effectual to save souls, and leaveth all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy.

DOCTRINAL. n. f. [from doctrina, Latin.] Something that is part of doctrine.

Not such as assent to every word in Scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ.

DOCTRINALLY. adv. [from doctrina.] In the form of doctrine; positively; as necessary to be held.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual forms of speech, without delivering any thing doctrinally concerning these points.

DOCTRINE. n. f. [from doctrina, Latin.] 1. The principles or positions of any sect or master; that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or commonwealth is there which maketh not either at one time or other?

Ye are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies toward each other.

DOCTRINE. n. f. [from doctrina, Latin.] 2. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine.

DOCUMENT. n. f. [from documentum, Latin.]

1. Precept: instruction; direction. It is a most necessary instruction and document for them, that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributors.

Learners should not be too much crouded with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time.

2. Precept in an ill sense; a precept insolently authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attacked, and stand upon their guard.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes.

DODDER. n. f. [from dodder, Dutch.]

DODDER is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed, soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment.

DODDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supererect plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew, Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round

The household gods, and shade the holy ground.

The peasants were enjoin'd Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.

DODECAGON. n. f. [from dodeca and gonia.] A figure of twelve sides.

DODECATEMERION. n. f. [from dodeka and temerion.] The twelfth part.

'Tis dodecaterion thus describ'd: Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains, Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains; It follows straight, that every twelfth confines Two whole, and one half portion of the signs.

To DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog;

to shift and play sly tricks like a dog.]

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to higgel and dodge in the amends.

The consideration should make them grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God.

2. To shift place as another approaches. For he had, any time this ten years full, Dodg'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them. You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me; the dodg'd with me above thirty years.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time.

4. The word in all its senses is low and vulgar. DODKIN. n. f. [from doyken, Dutch.] A doikkin or little doik; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

I would not buy them for a doikkin.

DOF

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

4. The word in all its senses is low and vulgar.

DODKIN. n. f. [from doyken, Dutch.] A doikkin or little doik; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

I would not buy them for a doikkin.

DOFMAN. n. f. the name of a fish.

Fish that cast their shell are the lobster, the crawfish, the hommandor or dofman, and the tortoise.

DOE. n. f. [ba, Saxon; doe, Danish; dama, Latin.] A she-deer; the female of a buck.

Then but forbear your food a little while, While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,

And give it food.

Bucks have horns, does none.

And flying stag amidst the greyhounds go.

DOE. n. f. [from do.] A feat: what one has to do; what one can perform.

No sooner he does peep into The world, but he has done his doe.

DOER. n. f. [from do.] One that does any thing good or bad.

So foul a thing, O! thou injustice art, That tort'rest both the deer and distrest.

It may be indeed a public crime, or a national mischief; yet it is but a private act, and the deer of it may chance to pay his head for his presumption.

2. Actor; agent. Sith thus far we open the things that have been done, let not the principal doers themselves be forgotten.

3. Performer. One judgeth the prize to the best doer, of which they are no less glad than great princes are of triumphs.

4. An active, or busy, or valiant person. Fear not, my lord, we will not stand to prate; Ta'kers are no good doers: be assur'd,

We go to use our hands, not our tongues.

They are great speakers, but small doers; great in shew than in deed.

5. One that habitually performs or practises. Be doers of the word, and not hearers only.

In this we shew ourselves weak, and unapt to be doers of his will, in that we take upon us to be controllers of his wisdom.

DOES. The third person from do for doth. Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries.

TO DOFF. v. a. [from do off.]

1. To put off drefs. You have deceiv'd our trust, And made us doff our early robes of peace, To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel.

DOFF those links.

DOG

Nature, in awe to him, Had doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great master so to sympathize. That judge is hot, and doffs his gown.

Alcides doffs the lion's tawny hide.

2. To strip; to divest of any thing. Why art thou troubled, Herod? What vain fear

Thy blood-revolving breast doth move? Heaven's king, who doffs himself our flesh to wear,

Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love.

3. To put away; to get rid of. Your eye in Scotland

Would create soldiers, and make women fight, To doff their dire distresses.

4. To shift off; to delay: to refer to another time; to put off. Every day thou doff'st me with some device,

Iago; and rather keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope.

Away, I will not have to do with you.—Can'st thou so doff me?

5. This word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks; yet it is a pure and commodious word.

DOG. n. f. [from dogge, Dutch; canis, Latin.]

1. A domestic animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bulldog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these foath every passion:

Renegs, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog?

The clamour roars of men and boys, and dogs.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the particular days, or dog days.

Among the southern constellations, two there are which bear the name of the dog; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus.

It parts the twins and crab, the dog divides, And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides.

3. A reproachful name for a man. I never heard a passion so confus'd,

So strange, outrageous, and so variable, As the dog Jew did utter in the streets.

Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers.

4. To give or send to the Dogs; to throw away. To go to the Dogs; to be ruined, destroyed, or devoured.

Had whole Colepepper's wealth been hops and hogs,

Could he himself have sent it to the dogs!

5. It is used as the term for the male of several species; as the dog fox, the dog otter.

If ever I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliments is like the encounter of two dog apes.

The same ill taste of sense will serve to join Dog foxes in the yoke, and sheer the swine.

6. Dog is a particle added to any thing to mark meanness, or degeneracy, or worthlessness; as dog rose.

To Dog. v. a. [from the noun.] To hunt as a dog, insidiously and indefatigably.

I have dogg'd him like his murderer.

I, his despicable Juno, sent him forth From courtly friends, with camping foes to live.

Where

Where death and danger dog the heels of worth.
Shakespeare.
Sorrow dogging sin,
Herbert.
Afflictions sorted.
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Left some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our renowned sister.
These spiritual joys are dogged by no sad sequels.
Milton.
I have been pursued, dogged, and way-laid through several nations, and even now scarce think myself secure.
Hate dogs their rise, and insult mocks their fall.
Pope.
Hate dogs their rise, and insult mocks their fall.
Vanity of Human Wishes.
DOG-FISHER. n. f. [dog and fisher.] A kind of fish.
The dog-fisher is good against the falling sickness.
Walton.
DOG-TEETH. n. f. [dog and teeth.] The teeth in the human head next to the grinders; the eye-teeth.
The best instruments for dividing of herbs or incisor-teeth; for cracking of hard substances, as bones and nuts, grinders, or mill-teeth; for dividing of flesh, sharp-pointed or dog-teeth.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
DOG-TRICK. n. f. [dog and trick.] An ill turn;
fury or brutal treatment.
Learn better manners, or I shall serve you a dog-trick; I'll make you know your rider.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.
DO'GBANE. n. f. [dog and bane.] A plant. Miller.
DOGBERRY-TREE. A kind of cherry.
DO'GBOLT. n. f. [dog and bolt.] Of this word
I know not the meaning, unless it be, that when meal or flower is sifted or bolted to a certain degree, the coarser part is called dogbolt, or flower for dogs.
His only solace was, that now
His dogbolt fortune was so low,
That either it must quickly end,
Or turn about again, and mend.
Hudibras.
DO'GBRIAR. n. f. [dog and briar.] The briar that bears the hip; the cynosbaton.
DO'GCHEAP. adj. [dog and cheap.] Cheap as dogs meat; cheap as the offal bought for dogs.
Good store of harlots, say you, and dogcheap?
Dryden.
DO'GDAYS. n. f. [dog and days.] The days in which the dogstar rises and sets with the sun, vulgarly reputed unwholesome.
Nor was it more in his power to be without promotion and titles, than for a healthy man to sit in the sun, in the brightest dogdays, and remain without warmth.
Clarendon.
DO'GDRAW. n. f. [dog and draw.] A manifest deprehenion of an offender against venison in the forest, when he is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound which he leads in his hand.
Cowel.

palace, with the title of deliverer of the commonwealth.
Addison.
DO'GFISH. n. f. [from dog and fish.] Another name for a shark.
It is part of the jaw of a shark, or dogfish.
Woodward.
DO'GFLY. n. f. [dog and fly.] A voracious biting fly.
Thump-buckler Mars began,
And at Minerva with a lance of brags he headlong ran;
These vile words ushering his blows, Thou dogfly, what's the cause
Thou mak'st gods fight thus? Chapman's Iliad.
DO'GGED. adj. [from dog.] Sullen; four; morose; ill-humoured; gloomy.
Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.
Shakespeare's King John.
Dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whose over-weening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse doth level at my life.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Few miles on horseback had they jogged,
But fortune unto them turn'd dogged.
Hudibras.

Skinner.] A small ship with one mast.
DO'GGEREL. adj. [from dog.] Loosed from the measures or rules of regular poetry; vile;
despicable; mean; used of verses.
Then hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;
Who by my muse to all succeeding times,
Shall live in spite of their own doggel rhymes.
Dryden.
Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,
And in his sphere may judge all doggel rhyme.
Dryden.
It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggel, like that of Hu-dibras.
Addison's Spectator.
DO'GGEREL. n. f. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.
The hand and head were never lost of those Who dealt in doggel, or who pin'd in prose.

That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
DO'GSOLE. n. f. [dog and sole.] A vile hole;
a mean habitation.
France is a dogsole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakespeare.
But, could you be content to bid adieu
To the dear playhouse, and the players too, Sweet country feats are purchas'd ev'ry where,
With lands and gardens, at less price than here;
You hire a darksome dogsole by the year.
Dryden's Juvenal.
Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd dogsole ek'd with ends of wall.
Pope.
DO'GKENNEL. n. f. [dog and kenel.] A little hut or house for dogs.
A certain nobleman, beginning with a dogkenel,

that harbours on dogs.
DO'GMA. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Established principle; doctrinal notion.
Our poet was a stoick philosopher, and all his moral sentences are drawn from the dogmas of that sect.
Dryden.
2. [In canon law.] Dogma is that determination which consists in, and has a relation to, some ca-suistical point of doctrine, or some doctrinal part of the Christian faith.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
DOGMATICAL. adj. [from dogma.] Autho-DOGMATICK. } ritative; magisterial; positive; in the manner of a philosopher laying down
the first principles of a sect.
The dim and bounded intellect of man seldom prosperously adventures to be dogmatical about things that approach to infinite, whether in vastness or littleness.
Boyle.
I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatical way, which is much his character.
Dryden.
Learning gives us a discovery of our ignorance, and keeps us from being peremptory and dogmatical
in our determinations.
Collier on Pride.
Criticks write in a positive dogmatick way, without either language, genius, or imagination.
Spectator.

One of these authors is indeed so grave, sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him.
Swift.
DOGMATICALLY. adv. [from dogmatical.] Ma-gisterially; positively.
I shall not presume to interpose dogmatically in a controversy, which I look never to see decided.
South.

quality of being dogmatical; magisterialness;
mock authority.
DOGMATIST. n. f. [dogmatiste, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive asserter; a bold advancer of principles.
I could describe the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in.
Glanville's Scipius.
A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor. Watts's Improv. Mind.
To DOGMATIZE. v. n. [from dogma.] To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.
These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools,
Impos'd on nature arbitrary rules;
Forc'd her their vain intentions to obey,
And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way.
Blackmore.
DOGMATIZER. n. f. [from dogmatize.] An as-serter; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.
Such opinions, being not entered into the con-

A dogtrot through the bawling crowd. Hudibras.
DO'GWEARY. adj. [dog and weary.] Tired as a dog, excessively weary.
Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long,
That I am dogweary. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
DO'GWOOD. A species of cornelian cherry.
DO'ILY. n. f. A species of woollen stuff, so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.
We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool, and a dogly stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve's Way of the World.
DO'INGS. n. f. [from To do.] This word has hardly any singular.
1. Things done; events; transactions.
I have but kill'd a fly.
—But! how if that fly had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buz lamented doings in the air. Shakespeare.
2. Feats; actions: good or bad.
The next degree was to mark all Zelmae's do- ings.

DOL

Things, speeches and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding. Sidney.
If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my dole; let me say
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
At length a reverend fire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd,
And testify'd against their ways. Milton.
3. Behaviour; conduct.
Never the earth on his round shoulders bare,
A maid train'd up from high or low degree,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
Mirth with respect, few words with courtesy.

4. Conduct; dispensation.
Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High.

5. Stir; bustle; tumult.

a condition of bringing France to our terms.

Swift.
DOIT. n. f. [duyt, Dutch; doigt, Erse.] A small piece of money.

When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian.

Shakespeare's Temp.
In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit. Pope.
DOLE. n. f. [from dol; ælan, Saxon.]

1. The act of distribution or dealing.
It was your presumption,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop.

Shakespeare.
The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner.

Bacon.
At her general dole
Each receives his ancient soul. Cleaveland.
2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.
Now, my masters, happy man be his dole say I;
every man to his business. Shakespeare.

Let us, that are unhurt and whole,
Fall on, and happy man's be's dole. Hudibras.
3. Provisions or money distributed in charity.
They had such firm dependence on the day,
That Need grew pamp'rd, and forgot to pray;
So sure the dole, so ready at their call,
They stood prepar'd to see the manna fall. Dryden.
Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd.

Dryden's Juvenal.
4. Blows dealt out.
What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard, by miracle restor'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And overhaups of slaughter'd walk his way?

Milton.
5. [from dolor.] Grief; sorrow; misery. Obsolete.
Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping.

Shakespeare's As you like it.
Our sometime sister, now our queen,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife, Shakespeare's Hamlet.
They might hope to change

Torment with ease, and soonest recompence Dole with delight. Milton's Paradise Lost.

her doleful humour. Sidney.

For none but you, or who of you it learns,
Can rightfully aread to doleful lay. Spenser.

With scrowed face, and doleful whine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances. South.

Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,
And in those absent flames began to fry:
The blind contagion rag'd within his veins. Dry.

2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief; sorrowful.

How oft my doleful fire cry'd to me, tarry, son,
When first he spy'd my love! Sidney.

3. Dismal; impressing sorrow; dolorous.
It watereth the heart to the end it may fructify;
maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befal men in this present life. Hooker.

No light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover fights of woe,
Regions of sorrow! doleful shades! where peace
And rest can never dwell! Milton's Parad. Lost.

Happy the mortal man! who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of misery past;
Who to his destin'd stage has carry'd on
The tedious load, and laid his burden down.

Prior.

3. Inhabiting the house; not wild.
The faithful prudent husband is an honest, tractable, and domestic animal. Addison's Spectator.
4. Not foreign; intestine.

Domestic evils, for that we think we can master them at all times, are often permitted to run on forward, 'till it be too late to recall them.

Hooker, Dedication.

Equity of two domestic pow'rs
Breeds scrupulous faction.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Combine together 'gainst the enemy;

For these domestic and particular broils

Are not the question here. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Such they were, who might presume t' have done

Much for the king and honour of the state;

Having the chiefest actions undergone,

Both foreign and domestic of late. Daniel.

Next to the sin of those who began that rebellion, theirs must needs be who hindered the speedy suppressing of it, by domestic dissensions.

King Charles.

To DOMESTICATE. v. a. [from domestic.] To make domestic; to withdraw from the publick.

Clarissa.

DOMESTICK. n. f. One kept in the same house.

DONARY. n. f. [donarium, Latin.] A thing given to sacred uses.

DONATION. n. f. [donatio, Latin.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl

Dominion absolute; that right we hold

By his donation. Milton's Paradise Lost.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given: which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money.

South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all.

Raleigh's Essays.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n, Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd,

Other donation none thou canst produce. Milton.

DONATIVE. n. f. [donatif, Fr. from donatus, Lat.]

which donative they received, wearing garlands upon their heads.

Hooker.

They were entertained with publick shews and donatives, to make them more easily digest their lost liberty.

Dryden.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Cowel.

DOO

Never did steeple carry double truer;

His is the donative, and mine the cure. Clearvland.

DONE. part. pass. of the verb To do.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,

Whereof who so did eat, eftsoons did know

Both good and evil: O mournful memory!

That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded; when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager? Shakespeare's Tempest.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;

Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.

—Done: but my bargain shall be this,

I'll throw my mask off when I kiss. Clearvland.

'Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be the judge. L'Estrange.

DONJON. n. f. [now corrupted to dungeon, from dominionum, low Latin, according to Menage.] The highest and strongest tower of the castle, in which prisoners were kept; as in Chaucer. It is now used of subterraneous prisons.

The grete toure, that was so thicke and strong, Which of the castle was the chief dungeon,

Wherein the knights were in prison,

Was evin joynant to the garden-wall,

Ther as this Emely had her playenge. Chaucer.

DONOR. n. f. [from donor, Lat.] A giver; a benefactor; one who gives any thing.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,

And begging lords and teeming ladies wait

The promis'd dole. Dryden's Juvenal.

It is a mighty check to beneficent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote.

Atterbury.

DOODLE. n. f. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little, Faintant.] A trifler; an idler.

To DOOM. v. a. [doeman, Saxon.]

1. To judge.

Him through malice fall'n,

Father of mercy and grace! thou did'st not doom

So strictly, but much more to pity incline. Milton.

2. To condemn to any punishment; to sentence.

He may be doom'd to chains, to shame, to death, While proud Hippolitus shall mount his throne.

Smith.

Justly th' impartial fates conspire,

Dooming that son to be the fire

Of such another son.

Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,

And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;

Round in his urn the blended balls he rolls,

Abolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.

Dryden's Æneid.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.

Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death?

And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave?

Shakespeare.

5. To destine; to command by uncontrollable authority.

Fate and the gods, by their supreme command,

Have doom'd our ships to seek the Latian land.

Dryden's Æneid.

I have no will but what your eyes ordain;

Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign.

Granville.

DOEM. n. f. [dom, Saxon; doem, Dutch.]

1. Judicial sentence; judgment.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;

And humbly thus, with halts on their neck,

Expect your highness' doom of life or death.

Shakespeare.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best.

Milton.

And now, without redemption, all mankind Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell

By doom severe. Milton.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all hearts

Hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or ex-cusing him. Locke.

2. The great and final judgment.

Search Windfor-castle, elves, within and out :
Strew good luck, Ouphes, on every sacred room,
That it may stand 'till the perpetual doom. Shakespeare.

3. Condemnation; judicial sentence.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou do'st evil. Shakespeare. King Lear.

4. Determination declared.

If friend or foe, let him be gently used.
—Revoke that doom of mercy; for 'tis Clifford. Shakespeare.

5. The state to which one is destined.

By day the web and loom,
And homely household-task shall be her doom. Dryden's Iliad.

6. Ruin; destruction.

From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom,
And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome. Pope.

DOOMSDAY. n. f. [doom and day.]

1. The day of final and universal judgment;
the last, the great day.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and
run,
As it were doomsday. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

They may serve for any theme, and never be out of date until doomsday. Brown's Vul. Err.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night :
This only holiday of all the year,
We privileg'd in sunshine may appear. Dryden.

2. The day of sentence or condemnation.

All foul's-day is my body's doomsday.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

DOOMSDAY-BOOK. n. f. [doomsday and book.] A book made by order of William the Conqueror, in which the estates of the kingdom were registered.

The Danes also brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras, which is mentioned in doomsday-book. Camden.

DOOR. n. f. [bon, bune, Saxon; dorris, Erse.]

1. The gate of a house; that which opens to yield entrance. Door is used of houses, and gates of cities, or public buildings, except in the license of poetry.

All the castle quaked from the ground,
And every door of free-will open flew. Fairy Queen.

In the side, a door

Contriv'd; and of provisions laid in large,
For man and beast. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To the same end men several paths may tread,
As many doors into one temple lead. Denham.

For without rules there can be no art, any more than there can be a house without a door to conduct you in. Dryden.

2. In familiar language, a house; often in the plural, doors.

Lay one piece of flesh or fish in the open air, and another of the same kind and bigness within doors. Bacon's Natural History.

Let him doubt whether his cloaths be warm, and so go naked; whether his house be firm, and live without doors. Decay of Piety.

Martin's office is now the second door in the street, where he will see Parnel. Arbutnot.

Lambs, though they are bred within doors, and never saw the actions of their own species, push at those who approach them with their foreheads.
Addison's Spectator.

The sultan entered again the peasant's house,
and turned the owner out of doors. Addison's Guardian.

3. Entrance; portal.

The tender blades of grafts appear,
And buds, that yet the blast of Eurus fear, Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year. Dryden.

4. Passage; avenue; means of approach.

The indispensable necessity of sincere obedience, shuts the door against all temptations to carnal security. Hammond.

5. Out of Door, or Doors. No more to be found; quite gone; fairly sent away.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee
now,
With a harsh voice and supercilious brow,
To fervile duties, thou would'st fear no more;
The gallows and the whip are out of door. Dryden's Pers.

His imaginary title of fatherhood is out of doors, and Cain is no prince over his brother. Locke.

6. At the Door of any one. Imputable; chargeable upon him.

In any of which parts, if I have failed, the fault lies wholly at my door. Dryden's Dufres. Pref.

7. Next Door to. Approaching to; near to;
bordering upon.

A feditious word leads to a broil, and a riot unpunished is but next door to a tumult. L'Estrange.

DOORCASE. n. f. [door and case.] The frame in which the door is inclosed.

The making of frames for doorcases, is the framing of two pieces of wood athwart two other pieces. Moxon.

DOORKEEPER. n. f. [door and keeper.] Porter;
one that keeps the entrance of a house.

He that hath given the following assistance to thee, desires to be even a doorkeeper in God's house, and to be a servant to the meanest of God's servants. Taylor's Preface.

DOQUET. n. f. A paper containing a warrant.
Before the institution of this office, no doquet for licence to alien, nor warrant for pardon of alienation made, could be purchased without an oath.
Bacon's Office of Alienation.

DO'RMANT. adj. [dormant, French.]

1. Sleeping.

He a dragon! if he be, 'tis a very peaceful one :
I can insure his anger is dormant; or should he seem to rouse, 'tis well lashing him, and he will sleep like a top. Cungreve's Old Bachelor.

With this radius he is said to strike and kill his prey, for which he lies, as it were, dormant, 'till it twims within his reach. Grew's Museum.

2. In a sleeping posture.

If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not a lion rampant, but rather couchant and dormant. Brown.

3. Private; not public.

There were other dormant musters of foldiers throughout all parts of the realm, that were put in readiness, but not drawn together. Bacon's War with Spain.

4. Concealed; not divulged.

It would be prudent to reserve these privileges dormant, never to be produced but upon great occasions. Swift.

5. Leaning; not perpendicular.

Old dormant windows must confess
Her beams : their glimmering spectacles,
Struck with the spleador of her face,
Do th' office of a burning glass. Cleveland.

DO'RMITORY. n. f. [dormitorium, Latin.]

1. A place to sleep in; used commonly for a room with many beds.

Rooms that have thorough lights are left for entertainment, and those that have windows on one side for dormitories. Mortimer.

Naked mourns the dormitory wall,
And Jones and Boyle's united labours fall. Pope's Dunciad.

2. A burial place.

The places where dead bodies are buried, are in Latin called cæmeteria, and in English dormitories. Ayliffe's Paragon.

DO'RMOUSE. n. f. [dormio, to sleep, and mouse.]
A small animal which passes a large part of the winter in sleep.

Come, we all sleep, and are mere dormice flies,
A little less than dead; more dulness hangs
On us than on the moon. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

After they have lain a little while, they grow as drowsy as dormice, unless they are roused. Collier on Thoughts.

DORN. n. f. [from dorn, German, a thorn.]
The name of a fish; perhaps the same as the thornback.

The coast is stored both with shellfish, as scallops and sheathfish, and flat, as turbot, dorrs, and holybutts. Carew.

DO'RNICK. n. f. [of Dornick in Flanders, where first made.] A species of linen cloth used in Scotland for the table.

To DORR. v. a. [tor, stupid, Teutonic.] To deafen or stupify with noise. This word I find only in Skinner.

DORR. n. f. [so named probably from the noise which he makes.] A kind of flying insect, remarkable for flying with a loud noise.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all the vagimpennous, or sheathwinged, as beetles and dorrs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The dorr, or hedge-chaffer's chief marks are these : his head is small, like that of the common beetle; this and his eyes black : his shoulder-piece, and the middle of his belly, also black; but just under the wing-shells spotted with white. His wing-shells, legs, and the end of his tail, which is long and flat-pointed, of a light chestnut : his breast, especially, covered with a downy hair.

DO'RSSEL. n. f. [from dossum, the back.] A Do'RSER. } pannier; a basket or bag, one of which hangs on either side a beast of burthen, for the reception of things of small bulk. It is corruptly spoken, and perhaps written, doffel.

DORSIFEROUS. n. f. [from dossum and fero, or pario, to bear.] Latin.] Having the property of bearing or bringing forth on the back. It is used of plants that have the seeds on the back of their leaves, as fern; and may be properly used of the American frog, which brings forth young from her back. Grew's Museum.

DORSIPAROUS. n. f. [from dossum and pario,
to bear.] Latin.] Having the property of bearing or bringing forth on the back. It is used
of plants that have the seeds on the back of their leaves, as fern; and may be properly used of the American frog, which brings forth young from her back.

DO'RTURE. n. f. [contracted from dormiture; dormitura, Latin; dortor, French.] A dormitory;
a place to sleep in.

He led us to a gallery like a dorture, where he shewed us along the one side seventeen cells, very neat. Bacon.

DOSE. n. f. [dosæ.]

1. So much of any medicine as is taken at one time. Quincy.

The too vig'rous dose too fiercely wrought,
And added fury to the strength it brought. Dryden's Virgil.

In a vehement pain of the head he prescribed the juice of the thapsia in warm water, without mentioning the dose. Arbutnot.

2. Any thing nauseous.

If you can tell an ignoramus in power and place, that he has a wit and understanding above all the world, I dare undertake that as fulsome a dose as you give him, he shall readily take it down. South.

3. As much of any thing as falls to a man's lot.
Ludicrously.

No sooner does he peep into
The world, but he has done his dose;
Married his punctual dose of wives,
Is cuckolded, and breaks, or thrives. Hudibras.

4. Quantity.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so. Granville.

5. It is often used of the utmost quantity of strong liquor that a man can swallow. He has his dose, that is, he can carry off no more.

To DOSE. v. a.

1. To proportion a medicine properly to the patient or disease.

Plants seldom used in medicine, being esteemed poisonous, if corrected, and exactly dosed, may prove powerful medicines. Derb. Physico-Theology.

2. To give physick or any thing nauseous to any man in a ludicrous sense.

DO'SSEL. n. f. [corrupted from doffel, something laid upon the part.] A plectet; a nodule or lump of lint, to be laid on a fore.

Her complaints put me upon dressing with such a do'ssel. 3 T 2

DOT

medicaments as basilicon, with precipitate, upon a diffil. Wilman.

DOT. n. f. [the second person of do.]
Why then dot treat me with rebukes, instead
Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow?
Addison's Cato.

DOT. n. f. [This is derived by Skinner from dotter, German, the white of an egg, and interpreted by him a grume of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jet, a point.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing.

To DOT. v. a. To mark with specks.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots or spots.

DOTAGE. n. f. [from dot.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecility of mind; deliriousness.

The foul in all hath one intelligence:
Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,
And too much driness in an old man's sense,
Cannot the prints of outward things retain;
Then doth the foul want work, and idle sit,
And this we childishness and dotage call. Davies.
I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts
As joyful as our hearts:

Our senses tell us, if we please not them,
Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn,
Thank that fond dotage which so much you scorn. Dryden.

DOTAL. adj. [dotalis, Lat.] Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possess,
My people thin, my wretched country waste?
An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne,
Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own. Gar. Ov.

DOTARD. n. f. [from dot.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood; called in some provinces a twichild.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advice,
Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail,
And that weak old hath left thee nothing wise,
Else never should thy judgment be so frail. Pa. Qu.

The sickly dotard wants a wife.

To draw off his last dregs of life. Prior.
DOTATION. n. f. [dotatio, Latin.] The act of giving a dowry or portion. Diet.

To DOTTE. v. n. [doten, Dutch; radoter, Fr.]
1. To have the intellect impaired by age or passion; to be delirious.

Unless the fear of death doth make me dot,
I see my fon. Shakespeare's Com. of Errors.

A sword is upon the liars, and they shall dot:
A sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Jer. l. 36.

Time has made you dot, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell:
Go, be the temple and the gods your care;
Permit to men the thought of peace and war. Dryden's Æn.

When an old woman begins to dot, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies. Addison's Spectator.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me,
Which since is grown to such a dotting love, that I Was fain to get this place, sometimes to retire in freely. Sidney.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a dotting observance. Shakes.
To DOTTE upon. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford, whom they *dot*ed on,
And blest'd, and grac'd. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dot upon my love. Shaksp.

All the beauties of the court besides,
Are mad in love, and dot upon your person. Dent.
Mark those who dot on arbitrary power,
And you shall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts. Dryden.

DOU

Would you so dot upon your first desire,
As not to entertain a nobler fire. Dryden's Ind. Em.

We dot upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctance, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life. Burnet.

O death, all eloquent! you only prove
What dust we dot on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

DOTED. adj. [from the verb.] Stupid. Not used.

His senseless speech, and *dot*ed ignorance
The prince had marked well. Spenser.

DOTTER. n. f. [from dot.]

1. One whose understanding is impaired by years; a dotard.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb dotter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass? Burton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt,
It mourns that painting and usurping hair
Should ravish dotters with a false aspect;
And therefore is the born to make black fair. Shakespeare.

Our dotters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed, by the incertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Boyle.

DOTTERLY. adv. [from dotting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he to wedlock dotterly betray'd,
Should hope in this low town to find a maid!
Dryden's Juvenal.

DOTTARD. n. f. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in church-yards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards ad dotards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.

DOTTEREL. n. f. [from dot.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon.

DOUBLE. adj. [double, French; duplex, Lat. dupl, Erse.]

1. Two of a sort; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.

All things are double one against another, and he hath made nothing imperfect. Ecclesi. xlii. 24.

2. Twice as much; containing the same quantity repeated. It is sometimes used with to, and sometimes without.

Great honours are great burthens; but, on whom

They are cast with envy, he doth bear two loads:
His cares must still be double to his joys,
In any dignity. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

This sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient. Swift's Draper's Letters.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.

It is a curiosity to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flowers by neglecting, and not removing, prove single.

I met a reverend, fat, old gouty fryar,
With a paunch swollen so high, his double chin Might rest upon't. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.

Thus cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd. Dryden's Ovid.

No star appears to lend his friendly light;
Darkness and tempest make a double night. Dryden.

5. Two in number.

And if one power did not both see and hear,
Our sights and sounds would always double be. Davies.

DOU

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two. Not used.

The magnifico is much below'd,
And hath in his effect a voice potential,
As double as the duke's. Shakespeare's Othello.

7. Deceitful; acting two parts, one openly, the other in secret.

I th' presence

He would say untruths, and be ever double
Both in his words and meaning. Shakesf. Hen. VIII.

Fifty thousand could keep rank, that were not of double heart. 1 Chron. xii. 33.

DOUBLE-PEAL. n. f. [duplex placitum, Lat.] Is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff. Cowel.

DOUBLE-QUARREL. is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against any inferior ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentic seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official: and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double-quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed. Cowel.

DOUBLE. adv. Twice over.

I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetick; for then I was double their age, which now I am not. Swift.

DOUBLE is much used in compositions, generally for double, two ways; as double-edged, having an edge on each side; or for twice the number or quantity, as double-died, twice died.

DOUBLE-BITING. adj. [double and bite.] Biting or cutting on either side.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double-biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a giantick force to rear. Dryden's Fables.

DOUBLE-BUTTONED. adj. [double and buttoned.]

Having two rows of buttons.

Others you'll see, when all the town's afloat
Wrapt in th' embraces of a kersey coat,
Or double-button'd frieze. Gay's Trivia.

DOUBLE-DEALER. n. f. [double and dealer.] A deceitful, subtle, and insidious fellow; one who acts two parts at the same time; one who says one thing and thinks another.

Double-dealers may pass muster for a while; but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

DOUBLE-DEALING. n. f. [double and dealing.] Artifice; dissimulation; low or wicked cunning; the action of one thing with the profession of another.

Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold.

—But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Our poets have joined together such qualities as are by nature most compatible; valour with anger, meekness with piety, and prudence with dissimulation: this last union was necessary for the goodness of Ulysses; for without that, his dissimulation might have degenerated into wickedness and double-dealing. Broome's View of Epic Poetry.
To DOUBLE-DIE. v. a. [double and die.] To die twice over.

Yes, I'll to the royal bed,
Where first the mysteries of our love were acted,
And double die it with imperial crimfon. Dryden and Lee.

DOUBLE-FOUNTED. adj. [double and fount.]

Having two sources. Here

Here the double-founded stream
Jordan, true limit eastward. Milton.
DOUBLE-HANDED, adj. [double and hand.] Having two hands.

All things being double-handed, and having the appearances both of truth and falsehood, where our affections have engaged us, we attend only to the former. Glanville's Sceptis.

DOUBLE-HEADED, adj. [double and head.] Having the flowers growing one to another.

The double rich scarlet nonfuch is a large double-headed flower, of the richest scarlet colour. Mort.

TO DOUBLE-LOCK, v. a. [double and lock.] To shoot the lock twice; to fasten with double fe-curity.

He immediately double-locked his door, and sat down carefully to reading and comparing both his orders. Tutler.

DOUBLE-MINDED, adj. [from double and mind.]
Unsettled; undetermined.

A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. James.

DOUBLE-SHINING, adj. [double and shine.]
Shining with double lustre.

He was

Among the rest that there did take delight,
To see the sports of double-shining day. Sidney.

DOUBLE-TONGUED, adj. [double and tongue.]
Deceitful; giving contrary accounts of the same thing.

The deacons must be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre. 1 Tim.

For much she fear'd the Tyrians, double-tongued,
And knew the town to Juno's care belong'd. Dryden's Virgil.

TO DOUBLE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To enlarge any quantity by addition of the same quantity.

Rumour doth double voice, and echo
The numbers of the fear'd. Shakespeare's Her. IV.

Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond;
Double six thousand, and then treble that. Shakes.

Our foes too proud the weaker to assail,
Or doubles his dishonour if he fail. Dryden.

This power of repeating or doubling any idea we have of any distance, and adding it to the former, as often as we will, without being ever able to come to any stop or stint, is that which gives us the idea of immensity. Locke.

This was only the value of the silver: there was besides a tenth part of that number of talents of gold, which, if gold was reckoned in a decuple proportion, will just double the sum. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. To contain twice the quantity.

Thus reinforce'd against the adverse fleet,
Still doubling our's, brave Rippert leads the way. Dryden

3. To repeat; to add.

He saw proud Arcite and fierce Palemon
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their falchions to and fro. Dryden.

4. To add one to another in the same order to parallel.

Thou shalt double the curtain in the tabernacle. Exodus.

5. To fold.

He bought her sermons, psalms, and graces,
And doubled down the useful places. Prior.

6. To pass round a headland.

Sailing along the coast, he doubled the promontory of Carthage, yet famous for the ruins of that proud city. Kneller.

Now we have the Cape of Good Hope in sight,
The trade-wind is our own, if we can but double it. Dryden.

TO DOUBT, v. n.

1. To increase to twice the quantity.

'Tis observed in particular nations, that within the space of three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualties, the number of men double. Burnet's Theory.

2. To enlarge the stake to twice the sum in play.

Throw Egypt's by, and offer in the stead,
Offer—the crown on Berenice's head:
I am resolv'd to double 'till I win. Dryden's Tyrannic Love.

3. To turn back, or wind in running.

Under the line the sun crosseth the line, and maketh two Summers and two Winters; but in the skirts of the torrid zone it doubleth and goeth back again, and so maketh one long summer. Racon's Natural History.

Who knows which way she points?
Doubling and turning like an hunted hare!
Find out the meaning of her mind who can. Dryden.

So keen thy hunters, and thy scent so strong,
Thy turns and doublings cannot save thee long. Swift.

4. To play tricks; to use sleights.

Twice the quantity or number.
If the thief be found, let him pay double. Exodus.

In all the four great years of mortality above mentioned, I do not find that any week the plague increased to the double of the precedent week above five times. Graunt's Mortality.

2. Strong beer; beer of twice the common strength.

Here's a pot of good double, neighbour: drink, and fear not your man. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. A turn used to escape pursuit.

Man is frail,
Convulsions rack his nerves, and cares his breast;
His flying life is chas'd by raving pains,
Through all his doublings, in the winding veins. Blackmore.

4. A track; a shift; an artifice.

These men are too well acquainted with the chase, to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison.

DOUBLENESS, n. f. [from double.] The state of being double.

If you think well to carry this as you may,
the double-ness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. Shakespeare.

DOUBLER, n. f. [from double.] He that doubles
any thing.

DOUBLET, n. f. [from double.]

1. The inner garment of a man: the waistcoat: so called from being double for warmth, or because it makes the dress double.

What a pretty thing a man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit! Shakespeare.

His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword yet cudgel proof. Hudibras.

It is common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great grandfather. Addison on Italy.

They do but mimic ancient wits at best,
As apes our grandfathers in their doublet dress. Pope.

2. Two; a pair.

Those doublets on the sides of his tail seem to add strength to the muscles which move the tail fins. Grav's Museum.

DOUBLO'N, n. f. [French.] A Spanish coin containing the value of two pistoles.

DOUBLY, adv. [from double.] In twice the quantity; to twice the degree.

Young Hollis, on a muse by Mars begot,
Born, Cæsar like, to write and act great deeds,
Impatient to revenge his fatal shot,
His right hand doubly to his left succeeds. Dryden.

Haply at night he does with horror shun
A widow'd daughter, or a dying son:
His neighbour's offspring he to-morrow sees,
And doubly feels his want in their increase. Prior.

TO DOUBT, v. n. [doubter, Fr. dubito, Lat.]

1. To question; to be in uncertainty.

Even in matters divine, concerning some things, we may lawfully doubt and suspend our judgment, inclining neither to one side or other; as, namely, touching the time of the fall both of man and angels. Hooker.

Let no man, while he lives here in the world, doubt whether there is any hell or no, and thereupon live so, as if absolutely there were none. South.

I doubt not to make it appear to be a monstrous
folly to deride holy things. Tillotson.

Can we conclude upon Luther's instability, because in a single notion, no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubts? Atterbury.

2. To question any event, fearing the worst.

Doubting things go ill, often hurt more;
Than to be sure they do. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Admitting motion, this I urge to shew
Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton.

3. Sometimes with of in both the foregoing sentences.

Solyman said he had hitherto made war against divers nations, and always had the victory, whereof he doubted not now also. Kneller's History of the Turks.

Have I not manag'd my contrivance well,
To try your love and make you doubt of mine? Dryden.

4. To fear, to be apprehensive of ill.

I doubt there's deep resentment in his mind,
For the late flight his honour suffer'd there. Oron.

If there were no fault in the title, I doubt there are too many in the body of the work. Baker on Learning.

This is enough for a project, without any name; I doubt more than will be reduced into practice. Swift.

5. To suspect; to have suspicion.

The king did all his courage bend
Against those four which now before him were,
Doubting not who behind him doth attend. Daniel.

6. To hesitate; to be in suspense; to waver undetermined.

What fear we then, why doubt we to incense
His utmost ire? Milton.

At first the tender blades of grass appear,
And buds that yet the blast of Eurus fear,
Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the
year. Dryden.

TO DOUBT, v. a.

1. To hold questionable; to think uncertain.

2. To think endangered.

He from the terror of this arm so late Doubted his empire. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To fear; to suspect.

He did ordain the interdicts and prohibitions which we have to make entrance of strangers, which at that time was frequent, doubting novelties and commixture of manners. Bacon.

If they turn not back perverse;
But that I doubt. Milton.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the change of it, prefer
A noble life before a long. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

4. To distrust; to hold suspected.

To teach vain wits a science little known,
T'admire superior sense, and doubt their own. Pope.

DOUBT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Uncertainty of mind; suspense; undetermined state of opinion.

Could any difficulty have been proposed, the resolution would have been as early as the proposal; it could not have had time to fettle into doubt. South.

Those who have examined it, are thereby got past doubt in all the doctrines they profess. Locke.

2. Question; point unsettled.

Hippocrates commends the flesh of the wild fow above the tame, and no doubt but the animal is more or less healthy according to the air it lives in. Arbutnot on Allments.

'Tis past a doubt.

All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out. Pope.

3. Scruple; perplexity; irresolution.

Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose, by fearing to attempt,
The good we oft might win. Shakespeare.

4. Uncertainty of condition.

And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee;
and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have no assurance of thy life. Deu.

I'm

DOU

I'm bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. Shakespeare.
5. Suspicion; apprehension of ill.
I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you. Gal. iv. 20.
6. Difficulty objected.
To every doubt your answer is the same,
It so fell out, and so by chance it came. Blackm.
DOUBTER. n. f. [from doubt.] One who entertains scruples; one who hangs in uncertainty.
DOUBTFUL. adj. [doubt and full.]
1. Dubious; not settled in opinion.
Methinks I should know you, and know this man;
Yet I am doubtful. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Thus they their doubtful consultations ended. Milt.
2. Ambiguous; not clear in its meaning: as, a doubtful expression.
3. That about which there is doubt, that which is not yet determined or decided! obscure; questionable; uncertain.
In handling the right of a war, I am not willing to intermix matter doubtful with that which is out of doubt; for as in capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; so much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.
In doubtful cases, reason still determines for the surer side; especially if the case be not only doubtful, but also highly concerning, and the venture be a soul, and an eternity. South.
Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,
Or to the Trojan destiny requir'd,
Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryden.
4. Hazardous; of uncertain event.
We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's high Lord had pow'rfullest. Milton.
New counsels to debate
What doubtful may ensue. Milton.
5. Not secure; not without suspicion.
Our manner is always to cast a doubtful and a more suspicious eye towards that, over which we know we have least power. Hooker, Dedication.
6. Not confident; not without fear.
With doubtful feet and wavering resolution
I come, still dreading thy displeasure, Samson. Milt.
This was at first resolved
If we were wife, against so great a foe
Contending, and so doubtful what might fall. Milton.
7. Partaking different qualities.
Looks
Downcast and damp, yet such wherein appear'd
Some glimpse of joy, which on his count'nance cast
Like doubtful hue. Milton.
DOUBTFULLY. adv. [from doubtful.]
1. Dubiously; irresolutely.
2. Ambiguously; with uncertainty of meaning.
Knowing how doubtfully all allegories may be construed, and this book of mine being a continual allegory, I have thought good to discover the general intention. Spenser.
Nor did the goddess doubtfully declare
Her alter'd mind, and alienated care. Dryden.
DOUBTFULNESS. n. f. [from doubtful.]
1. Dubiousness; suspense; instability of opinion.
Though doubtfulness or uncertainty seems to be a medium between certain truth and certain falsehood in our minds, yet there is no such medium in things themselves. Watts.
2. Ambiguity; uncertainty of meaning.
In arguing, the opponent uses as comprehensive and equivocal terms as he can, to involve his adversary in the doubtfulness of his expressions: and therefore the answerer, on his side, makes it his play to distinguish as much as he can. Locke.
Most of his philosophy is, in broken sentences, delivered with much doubtfulness. Baker on Learning.
2. Hazard; uncertainty of event or condition.
DOUBTINGLY. adv. [from doubt.] In a doubting manner; dubiously; without confidence.
Whatsoever a man imagineth doubtingly, or with fear, must needs do hurt, if imagination have any

DOU

power at all; for a man representeth that oftener that he feareth, than the contrary. Bacon's Natural History.
DOUBTLESS. adj. [from doubt.] Free from fear; void of apprehension of danger.
Pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend them. Shakespeare's K. John.
I am doubtless; I can purge Myself of many I am charg'd withal. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
DOUBTLESS. adv. Without doubt; without question; unquestionably.
Doubtless he would have made a noble knight. Shakespeare.
All their desires, desires, or expectations the Conqueror had no other means to satisfy, but by the estates of such as had appeared open enemies to him, and doubtless many innocent persons suffered in this kind. Hale's Common Law.
Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no mens sins to answer for, but their own. South.
Mountains have been doubtless much higher than they are at present: the rains have washed away the soil, that has left the veins of stones shooting out of them. Woodward.
Doubtless, oh guest! great laud and praise were mine,
If, after social rites and gifts bestow'd,
I stain'd my hospitable hearth with blood. Pope's Odyssey.
DOUCE. n. f. [douce, French.] A custard.
This word I find only in Skinner, and in Ainsworth.
DOUCKER. n. f. [colymbus; from To duck, corrupted from To duck.] A bird that dips in the water.
The colymbi, or douckers, or loons, are admirably conformed for diving, covered with thick plumage, and their feathers so slippery, that water cannot moisten them. Ray.
DOVE. n. f. [columbus, Latin; duvo, old Teuto-nick; taub, dau, German.]
1. A wild pigeon.
So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove? Pope.
Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly,
When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky;
Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,
When through the skies he drives the trembling doves. Pope.
2. A pigeon.
I have here a dish of doves, that I will bestow upon your worship. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
DOVECOAT. n. f. [dove and coat.] A small building in which pigeons are bred and kept.
Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli; Alone I did it. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
DOVEHOUSE. n. f. [dove and house.] A house for pigeons.
The hawk sets up for the protector, and makes havock in the dovehouse. L'Estrange.
But still the dovehouse obstinately stood. Dryden.
DOVETAIL. n. f. [dove and tail.] A form of joining two bodies together, where that which is inserted has the form of a wedge reversed, and therefore cannot fall out.
DOUGH. n. f. [doh, Saxon; deegh, Dutch.]
1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.
When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians. Dryden.
You that from pliant paste would fabricks raise,
Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know Their power to kneed, and give the form to dough. King.
2. My cake is DOUGH. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.

DOW

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. Shakespeare.
DOUGHBAKED. adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection; soft.
For when, through tasteless flat humility,
In doughbak'd men some harmless we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.
DOUGHTY. adj. [bohzig, Saxon; dough, virtue, Dutch.]
1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent. Used of men and things.
Such restless passion did all night torment
The flatt'ning courage of that fairy knight,
Devising how that doughy tournament,
With greatest honour, he atchieven might. Fairy Queen.
2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.
If this doughy historian hath any honour or conscience left, he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfleet.
She smil'd to see the doughy hero slain;
But, at her smile, the beau reviv'd again. Pope.
DOUCHY. adj. [from dough.] Unfound; soft;
unhardened.
Your son was misfed with a snipt taffata fellow there, whose villanous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakespeare.
TO DOUSE. v. a. [dous, but probably it is a cant word formed from the found.] To put over head suddenly in the water.
TO DOUSE. v. n. To fall suddenly into the
water.
It is no jesting, trivial matter,
To swing i' th' air, or douse in water. Hudibras.
DOWAGER. n. f. [dowairere, French.]
1. A widow with a jointure.
She lingers my desires,
Like to a stepdame or a dowager,
Long wintering on a young man's revenue. Shakespeare.
Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.
2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.
Catharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but prince's dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
DOWDY. n. f. An aukward, ill-dressed, inelegant woman.
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench;
Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipiy; Helen and Hero, slidings and harlots. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
The bedlam train of lovers use
T'inhance the value, and the faults excuse;
And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.
DOWDY. adj. Aukward.
No housewifery the dowdy creature knew:
To sum up all, her tongue confes'd the shrew. Gay.
DOWER. } n. f. [dowaire, French.]
DOWERY. }
1. That which the wife bringeth to her husband in marriage.
His wife brought in dow'r Cili's crown,
And in herself a greater dow'r alone. Dryden.
His only daughter in a stranger's pow'r;
For very want, he could not pay a dow'r. Pope.
Rich, though depriv'd of all her little store,
For who can seize fair virtue's better dow'r? Melmoth.
2. That which the widow possesses.
His patrimonial territories of Flanders were in dow'r to his mother-in-law. Bacon's Henry VII.
3. The gifts of a husband for a wife.
Ask me never so much dowery and gift, and I will give according as you shall say unto me; but give me the damsel for wife. Gen. xxxiv. 12.
4. Endowment; gift.

DOW

What spreading virtue, what a sparkling fire;
How great, how plentiful, how rich a dow'r,
Do'st thou within this dying flesh inspire; Davie.
Do'WERED, adj. [from dower.] Portioned; supplied with a portion.

Will you with those infirmities the owes,
Unfriended, new-adapted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

Take her, or leave her? Shakespeare's King Lear.
Do'WERLESS, adj. [from dower.] Wanting a fortune; unportioned.

Thy dow'r's daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, and ours, and our fair France. Shakespeare

Do'WLAS, n. f. A coarse kind of linen.
Dowlas, filthy dowlas; I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made boulders of them. Shakespeare

DOWN, n. f. [duun, Danish.]
1. Soft feathers.

Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of down. Wotton.
Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne

We tumble on our down, and court the blessing
Of a short minute's slumber. Denham's Sophy.
A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.

2. Any thing that fooms or mollifies.
Thou bosome softness! down of all my cares!
I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,
And yet be happy. Southern's Oronoko

3. Soft wool, or tender hair.
I love my husband still;
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first down began to shade his face. Dryden

On thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man. Prior

4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seeds.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand; as when feathers, or down of thistles, fly to and fro in the air. Bacon's Natural History

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys

DOWN, n. f. [duun, Saxon; dune, Erse, a hill.]
A large open plain; properly a flat on the top of an hill.

On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A haften'd hare from greedy greyhound go. Sidney

Lord of much riches which the use renowns;
Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graz'd on his downs. Sandys

Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich those downs is worth a thought,
To this my errand, and the care it brought. Milton

Hills afford pleasant prospects; as they must needs acknowledge who have been on the downs of Suffex. Ray

How Will-a-wisp misleads night-fairing clowns
O'er hills and sinking bogs, and pathless downs. Gay

To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down. Pope

Down, prep. [aduna, Saxon.]

1. Along a descent; from a higher place to a lower.

Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw after. Shakespeare's King Lear

A man falling down a precipice, though in motion, is not at liberty, because he cannot stop that motion if he would. Locke

2. Towards the mouth of a river.

Mahomet put his chief substance into certain boats, to be conveyed down the river, as purposing to fly. Knolles

DOWN, adv.
1. On the ground; from the height at which any thing was to a lower situation.

Whom they hit, none on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands. Milton's Paradise Lost

Down sinks the giant with a thund'ring found,
His pond'rous limbs oppress the trembling ground. Dryden

2. Tending towards the ground.
3. From former to latter times: as, this has been the practice down from the conquest.

4. Out of sight; below the horizon.
How goes the night, boy?
—The moon is down; I have not heard the clock,
And the goes down at twelve. Shakespeare's Macbeth

5. To a total subjection: used of men and things.
What remains of the subject, after the decoration is continued to be boiled down, with the addition of fresh water, to a rapid fat. Arbutnot on Alim

6. Into disgrace; into declining reputation.
He shar'd our dividend o' th' crown,
We had so painfully preach'd down;
And forc'd us though against the grain,
T' have calls to teach it up again. Hudibras

It has been still preached up, but acted down; and dealt with, as the eagle in the fable did with the oyster, carrying it up on high, that by letting it fall, he might dash it in pieces. South

There is not a more melancholy object in the learned world, than a man who has written himself down. Addison

7. [Answering to up.] Here and there.
Let them wander up and down for meat, and grudge if they be not satisfied. Psal. lix. 15

DOWN, interj.
1. An exhortation to destruction or demolition.
Go, some pull down the Savoy; others to the Inns of Courts: down with them all. Shakespeare

If there be ten, shrink not; but down with them. Shakespeare
But now they cry, down with the palace, fire it, Pull out th' usurping queen. Dryden

2. A contemptuous threat.
Down, down to hell, and say I sent thee thither. Shakespeare

Down, [To go.] To be digested; to be received.
If he be hungry more than wanton, bread alone will down; and if he be not hungry, 'tis not fit
he should eat. Locke

I know not how absurd this may seem to the masters of demonstration; and probably it will hardly down with any body, at first hearing. Locke

To Down, v. a. [from the participle.] To knock;
to subdue; to suppress; to conquer.

The hidden beauties seem'd in wait to lie,
To down proud hearts, that would not willing die. Sidney

Do'WNCAST, adj. [down and cast.] Bent down;
directed to the ground.

Wanton languishing borrowed of her eyes the downcast look of Modesty. Sidney

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound,
'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprize. Dryden

Thy downcast looks and thy disorder'd thoughts,
Tell me my fate: I ask not the success
My cause has found. Addison's Cato

Do'WNFALL, n. f. [from down and fall.]
1. Ruin; calamity; fall from rank or state.

Why dost thou say King Richard is depos'd?
Par'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Shakespeare's Richard II

We have seen some, by the ways by which they had designed to rise uncontrollably, to have directly procured their utter downfall. South

2. A sudden fall, or body of things falling.
Each downfall of a flood the mountains pour
From their rich bowels, rolls a silver stream. Dryden

3. Destruction of fabrics.

Not more aghast the matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burn'd th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden

Do'WNFALLEN, participial adj. [down and fall.]
Ruined; fallen.

The land is now divorced by the downfallen steep cliffs on the farther side. Carew's Survey of Cornwall

Do'WNGYRED, adj. [down and gyred.] Let down
in circular wrinkles.

Lord Hamlet, with his stockings loose,
Ungarter'd, and downgyred to his ancles. Shakespeare
Do'WNHILL, n. f. [down and hill.] Declivity; descent.

Heavy the third, and stiff, he sinks apace;
And though 'tis downhill all, but creeps along the race. Dryden

Do'WNHILL, adj. Declivous; descending.
And the first steps a downhill greenfield yields. Congreve

Do'WNLOOKED, adj. [down and look.] Having a dejected countenance; gloomy; fullen; melancholy.

Jealousy suffus'd, with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all the view'd, in tawney drefs'd;
Downlook'd, and with a cuckow on her fist. Dryden

Do'WNLYING, adj. [down and lie.] About to be in travail of childbirth.

Do'WNRIGHT, adv. [down and right.]
1. Straight or right down; down perpendicularly.
A giant's slain in fight,

Or mow'd o'erthwart, or cleft downright. Hudibras
2. In plain terms; without ceremony.
Elves, away;

We shall chide downright if I longer stay. Shakespeare
3. Completely; without stopping short.

This paper put Mrs. Bull in such a passion, that she fell downright into a fit. Arbutnot

Do'WNRIGHT, adj.
1. Plain; open; apparent; undisguised.

An admonition from a dead author, or a caveat from an impartial pen, will prevail more than a downright advice, which may be mistaken as spoken magisterially. Bacon

It is downright madnets to strike where we have no power to hurt. L'Estrange

The merchant's wife, who abounds in plenty, is not to have downright money; but the mercenary part of her mind is engaged with a present of plate. Speator

2. Directly tending to the point; plain; artless.
I would rather have a plain downright wisdom, than a foolish and affected eloquence. Ben Jonson's Discoveries

3. Unceremonious; honestly furly.
When it came to the count to speak, old fact so stared him in the face, after his plain downright way, that the count was struck dumb. Addison's Count Tariff

4. Plain; without palliation.
The idolatry was direct and downright in the people, whose credulity is illimitable. Brown's Vulgar Errors

Religion seems not in danger from downright atheism, since rational men must reject that for want of proof. Rogers

Do'WNSITTING, n. f. [down and sit.] Rest;
repose; the act of sitting down, or going to rest.

Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising; thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Psalms cxxxix. 2

Do'WNWARD, } adv. [dunepeape, Saxon.]
Do'WNWARDS, }
1. Towards the centre.

As you lift up the glasses the drop will ascend;
slower and slower, and at length rest, being carried downward by its weight, as much as upwards
by the attraction. Newton

2. From a higher situation to a lower.
Look downward on that globe, whose hither sides,
With light from hence, shines. Milton

Hills are ornamental to the earth, affording pleasant prospects to them that look downward from them upon the subjacent countries. Ray on the Creation

What

DOX

What would this man? Now upward will he soar,
 And little less than angel, would be more:
 Now looking downwards, just as griev'd appears
 To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears.

3. In a course of successive or lineal descent.

A ring the Count does wear,
 That downward hath succeeded in his house,
 From son to son, some four or five descents.

DOWNWARD. adj.

1. Moving on a declivity; tending towards the centre; tending to the ground.

With downward force,
 That drove the sand along, he took his way,
 And roll'd his yellow billows to the sea. Dryden.

2. Declivous; bending.

When Aurora leaves our northern sphere,
 She lights the downward heaven, and rises there.

3. Depressed; dejected.

At the lowest of my downward thoughts, I pulled up my heart to remember, that nothing is achieved before it be thoroughly attempted, and that lying still doth never go forward. Sidney.

DOWNY. adj. [from down.]

1. Covered with down or nap.

By his gates of breath
 There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:
 Did he inspire, that light and weightless down
 Performe must move. Shakespeare.

There be plants that have prickles, yet have downy or velvet rind upon their leaves; as stock-gillyflowers and coltsfoot; which down or nap consisteth of a subtle spirit, in a soft substance.

Bacon's Natural History.

In her hand she held

A bough of fairest fruit, that downy smil'd,
 New gather'd, and ambrosiall smell diffus'd.

Milton.

2. Made of down or soft feathers.

A side breeze from westward waits their sails to fill,

And rest in those high beds his downy wings.

Dryden.

Belinda still her downy pillow preßt,
 Her guardian sylph prolong'd the balmy rest. Pope.

3. Soft; tender; soothing.

Banquo! Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
 Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
 And look on death itself. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The night's companion kindly cheating them
 Of all their cares, tam'd the rebellious eye
 Of sorrow with a soft and downy hand,
 Sealing all breaths in a lethargic band. Crafter.

DOWNY. n. f. [doux, French.] It ought to be DOWNY. f. written downy.

1. A portion given with a wife. See DOWER.
 I could marry this wench for this downy. Sidney.

And ask no other downy but such another jest.

Shakespeare.

The king must die, that I may make you great,
 And give a crown in downy with my love.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Tethys all her waves in downy gives.

Dryden's Virgil.

2. A reward paid for a wife.

Thine own hand
 An hundred of the faithless foe shall slay,
 And for a downy a hundred forekins pay. Cowley.

3. A gift; a fortune given.

DOWNY. n. f. [dōxa and dōxy.] A form of giving glory to God.

David breaks forth into these triumphant praises and doxologies, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who has kept me this day from shedding blood,
 and from avenging myself with my own hand.

South.

Little did Athanasius imagine, that ever it would have been received in the Christian Church, to conclude their books with a doxology to God and the blessed virgin.

Stillingfleet.

DOWNY. n. f. A whore; a loose wench.

When daffodils begin to pure,
 With heigh! the doxy over the dale. Shakef.

DRA

To DOZE. v. n. [dōper, Saxon; daes, Dutch.]

1. To slumber; to sleep lightly.

There was no sleeping under his roof: if he happened to doze a little, the jolly cobbler waked
 him. L'Estrange.

2. To live in a state of drowsiness; to be half asleep.

It has happened to young men of the greatest wit to waste their spirits with anxiety and pain, so far as to doze upon their work with too much eagerness of doing well. Dryden.

How to the banks, where bards departed doze,
 They led him soft. Pope's Dunciad.

Chiefless armies doze'd out the campaign,
 And navies yawnd for orders on the main. Pope.

To DOZE. v. a. To stupify; to dull.

He was now much decayed in his parts, and with immoderate drinking dozed in his understanding. Clarendon.

Two satyrs, on the ground,
 Stretch'd at his ease, their fire, Silenus, found Doz'd with his fumes, and heavy with his load.

Dryden.

DOZEN. n. f. [dousaine, French.] The number of twelve. It is seldom used but on light occasions.

We cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, but we keep a bawdyhouse straight.

Shakespeare.

That the Indian figs bear such huge leaves, or delicate fruit, I could never find; yet I have travelled a dozen miles together under them. Rahigh.

By putting twelve units together, we have the complex idea of a dozen. Locke.

The number of dissenters was something under a dozen with them. Swift.

DOZINESS. n. f. [from dozy.] Sleepiness; drou-sinefs. Little used.

A man, by a violent fit of the gout in his limbs, finds a doziness in his head, or a want of appetite.

Locke.

DOZY. adv. [from doze.] Sleepy; drousy; sluggish.

The yawning youth scarce half awake, essays
 His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise. Dryden.

DRA. n. f. [drabbe, Saxon, lees.] A whore;
 a strumpet.

That I the son of a dear father murder'd,
 Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
 And fall a cursing like a very drab! Shakef. Hamlet.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds.

Shakespeare.

Babe,

Ditch-deliver'd by a drab. Shakef. Macbeth.

Curs'd be the wretch so venal, and so vain,
 Paltry and proud as drabs in Drury-lane. Pope.

DRA. n. f. [drachma, Latin.]

1. An old Roman coin.

See here these movers, that do prize their honoures

At a crack'd drachm. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. The eighth part of an ounce.

DRAQUINGULUS. n. f. [Latin.] A worm bred in the hot countries, which grows to many yards in length between the skin and flesh.

DREAD. adj. [for dread, or the part. passive of To dread.] Terrible; formidable; dreaded.

Th' utmost sand-breach they shortly fetch,
 Whil'st the dread danger does behind remain.

Fairy Queen.

DRAFF. n. f. [drap, dirty, Saxon; draf, Dutch;
 the sediment of ale.]

1. Refuse; lees; dregs: properly something fluid.

You would think I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swinekeeping, from eating draff and husks. Shakef. Henry IV.

'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste
 On such as have no taste;

To offer them a surfeit of pure bread
 Whose appetite is dead!

No, give them grains their fill;
 Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.

I call'd, and drew them thither,
 My hell-hounds to lick up the draff and filth,

DRA

Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
 On what was pure. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
 'Till vermin, or the draff of servile food, Consume me. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Refuse; sweepings. Perhaps improper.

Younger brothers but the draff of nature. Dry.

DRAFFY. adj. [from draff.] Worthless; dreggy.

DRAFT. adj. [corrupt for draught.] Employed to draw.

Ulysses and old Nestor yoke you like draft oxen, and make you plough up the wair

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

To DRAG. v. a. [tragan, Saxon.]

1. To pull along the ground by main force; to draw heavily along

Such his aspect, when, foild with bloody dust, Dragg'd by the cords which thro' his feet were thrust. Denham.

While I have any ability to hold a commerce with you, I will never be silent; and this chancing to be a day that I can hold a pen, I will drag it as long as I am able. Swift.

2. To draw any thing burthenfome; any thing from which one cannot disengage one's self.

'Tis long since I, for my celestial wife,
 Loath'd by the gods, have dragg'd a ling'ring life.

Dryden.

Can I, who lov'd so well,
 To part with all my bliss to save my lover?

Oh! can I drag a wretched life without him?

Smith.

3. To draw contemptuously along, as a thing unworthy to be carried.

He triumphs in St. Austin's opinion; and is not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels, but he makes a shew of me. Stillingfleet.

4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.

They shall surprize
 The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains
 Through all his realm, and there confounded leave.

Milton.

The constable was no sooner espied but he was reproached with disdainful words, beaten and dragged in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escap'd with his life. Clarendon.

5. To pull roughly and forcibly.

To fall, that's justice;
 But then, to drag him after! For to die,
 And yet in death to conquer, is my wish. Dryden.

In my fatal cause your sword was drawn;
 The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down,

Dryden.

To DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains

Of foundling lasses, and of dragging chains. Dryden.

A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon's Mech. Exerciser.

DRA. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.

Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,
 Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on hooks.

Dryden.

The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgements to them is just the same absurdity with theirs who burnt incense to the drag, and sacrificed to the net.

Rogers.

2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of, things under water.

You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook, or otherwise. Walton.

3. A kind of car drawn by the hand.

The drag is made somewhat like a low car:
 it is used for the carriage of timber, and then is drawn by the handle by two or more men.

Moxon's Mechanical Exerciser.

DRA'GNET. n. f. [drag and net.] A net which is drawn along the bottom of the water.

Dragnets were made to fish within the deep,
 And castnets did rivers bottoms sweep.

May's Virgil.

Some

Some fishermen, that had been out with a drag-net, and caught nothing, had a draught towards the evening, which put them in hope of a sturgeon at last.

One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation, because he could never forgive any conceit which came in his way, but swept, like a dragnet, great and small.

Whatever old Time, with his huge dragnet, has conveyed down to us along the stream of ages, whether it be shells or shell-fish, jewels or pebbles, sticks or straws, seaweeds or mud, these are the ancients, these are the fathers.

To DRA'GGLE. v. a. [from drag.] To make dirty by dragging on the ground.

You'll see a dragged damsel, here and there, From Billinggate her fishy traffic bear.

He wore the same gown five years, without dragging or tearing.

To DRA'GOLE. v. n. To grow dirty by being drawn along the ground.

His dragging tail hung in the dirt, Which on his rider he would flurt.

DRA'GON. n. f. [draco, Lat. dragon, Fr.]

1. A kind of winged serpent, perhaps imaginary, much celebrated in the romances of the middle age.

I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen.

Swift, swift, you dragons of the night, that dawning

May bear the raven's eye.

And you, ye dragons! of the scaly race,

Whom glittering gold and shining armours grace;

In other nations harmless are you found,

Their guardian genii and protectors own'd.

On fiery volumes there a dragon rides;

Here, from our strict embrace, a stream he glides.

2. A fierce violent man or woman.

3. A constellation near the North pole.

DRA'GON. n. f. [draconulus, Latin.] A plant.

DRA'GONET. n. j. [from dragon.] A little dragon.

Of many dragons, his fruitful seed.

DRA'GONFLY. n. f. [dragon and fly; libella.] A fierce stinging fly.

The body of the cantharides is bright coloured;

and it may be, that the delicate coloured dragonflies

may have likewise some corrosive quality.

DRA'GONISH. adj. [from dragon.] Having the form of a dragon; dragon-like. An arbitrary word.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish;

A vapour sometimes like a bear or lion.

DRA'GONLIKE. adj. [dragon and like.] Furious;

fiery.

He fights dragonlike, and does achieve as soon

As draw his sword.

DRA'GONSBLOOD. n. f. [dragon and blood.] So called from a false opinion of the dragon's combat with the elephant.

Dragon's blood is a resin, so named as to seem to have been imagined an animal production.

Take dragon's blood, beat it in a mortar, and put it in a cloth with aqua vitae, and strain them together.

DRA'GONSHED. n. f. A plant.

DRA'GONTREE. n. f. A species of palm.

DRA'GOON. n. f. [from dragon, German, to carry.] A kind of folder that serves indifferently either on foot or horseback.

Two regiments of dragoons suffered much in the late action.

To DRA'GON. v. a. [from the noun.] To persecute by abandoning a place to the rage of soldiers.

In politicks I hear you're staunch,

Directly bent against the French;

Deny to have your free-born toe

Dragoon'd into a wooden shoe.

To DRAIN. v. a. [traine, Fr.]

1. To draw off gradually.

Salt water drained through twenty vessels of earth, hath become fresh.

The fountains drain the water from the ground adjacent, and leave but sufficient moisture to breed moss.

In times of dearth it drained much coin of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts.

Whilst a foreign war devoured our strength, and drained our treasures, luxury and expences increased at home.

The last emperor drained the wealth of those countries into his own coffers, without increasing his troops against France.

2. To empty by drawing gradually away what it contains.

Sinking waters the firm land to drain,

Fill'd the capacious deep, and form'd the main.

The royal babes a tawny wolf shall drain.

While cruel Nero only drains

The mortal Spaniard's ebbing veins,

By study worn, and slack with age,

How dull, how thoughtless is his rage!

Had the world lasted from all eternity, these comets must have been drained of all their fluids.

3. To make quite dry.

When wine is to be bottled, wash your bottles,

but do not drain them.

DRAIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The channel through which liquids are gradually drawn; a watercourse; a sink.

If your drains be deep, that you fear cattle fall-ling into them, cover them.

Why should I tell of ponds and drains,

What carps we met with for our pains.

DRAKE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The male of the duck.

The duck should hide her eggs from the drake,

who will suck them if he finds them.

2. [From draco, dragon, Fr.] A small piece of artillery.

Two or three shots made at them by a couple of drakes, made them stagger.

DRAM. n. f. [from drachm, drachma, Lat.]

1. In weight the eighth part of an ounce.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead,

weighing severally seven drams in the air, the balance in the water weigheth only four drams and forty-one grains, and abateh of the weight in the air two drams and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water.

2. A small quantity, in a kind of proverbial sense.

One loving hour

For many years of sorrow can dispense;

A drum of sweet is worth a pound of sour.

No drum of judgment with thy force is join'd;

Thy body is of profit, and my mind.

3. Such a quantity of distilled spirits as is usually drank at once.

I could do this, and that with no rash potion,

But with a ling'ring drum, that should not work

Maliciously like poison.

Every drum of brandy, every pot of ale that you drink, raiseth your character.

4. Spirits; distilled liquors.

A second fee, by meeker manners known,

And modest as the maid that sips alone;

From the strong fate of drums if thou get free,

Another Drury, Ward! shall sing in thee.

To DRAM. v. n. [from the noun.] In low language, to drink drums; to drink distilled spirits.

DRA'MA. n. f. [δραμα.] A poem accommodated to action; a poem in which the action is not related, but represented; and in which therefore such rules are to be observed as make the representation probable.

Many rules of imitating nature Aristotle drew from Homer, which he fitted to the drama; fur-fitting himself also with observations from the theatre, when it flourished under Æschylus, Euripides, and Sophocles.

DRAMA'TICAL. } adj. [from drama.] Repre-

DRAMA'TICK. } sented by action; not nar-scriptions and comparisons, as painters in their drap- eries and ornaments.

DRA'PET. n. f. [from drape.] Cloth; coverlet.

Not in use.

Thence she them brought into a stately hall,

Wherein were many tables fair disp'd,

And ready dight with drapets festival,

Against the viands should be minister'd.

DRA'STICK. adj. [δραστικόν.] Powerful; vigorous; efficacious.

It is used of a medicine that works with speed;

as jalap, scammony, and the stronger purges.

DRAVE. [the preterite of drive.] Drove is more

used.

He drove them beyond Amon's flood,

And their sad bounds mark'd deep in their own blood.

The foe rush'd furious as he pants for breath,

And through his navel drove the pointed death.

DRAUGH. n. f. [corruptly written for draff.]

Refuse; swill. See DRAFF.

We do not act, that often jest and laugh:

'Tis old, but true, still swine eat all the draugh.

DRAUGHT. n. f. [from draw.]

1. The act of drinking.

They slung up one of their hog'sheads, and I drank it off at a draught which I might well do;

for it did not hold half a pint.

2. A quantity of liquor drank at once.

He had once continued about nine days without drink; and he might have continued longer, if

by distempering himself one night with hard study, he had not had some inclination to take a small draught. Boyle.

Fill high the goblets with the sparkling flood,
And with deep draughts invoke our common god. Dryden.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;

He reels, and, falling, fills the spacious cave. Dryden's Æneid

I have cured some very desperate coughs by a draught every morning of spring water, with a handful of sage boiled in it. Temple.

Every draught, to him that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature; a provision for rheum and discharges. South.

3. Liquor drank for pleasure.

Were it a draught for Juno when the banquets,
I would not taste thy treasonous offer. Milton.

Number'd ills, that lie unseen

In the pernicious draught: the word obscene,
Or harsh, which, once elanc'd, must ever fly
Irrevocable, the too prompt reply. Prior.

Delicious wines the attending herald brought;
The gold gave lustre to the purple draught. Pope's Odyssey.

4. The act of drawing or pulling carriages.

A general custom of using oxen for all sorts of draught, would be perhaps the greatest improvement. Temple.

The most occasion that farmers have, is for draught horses. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The Hertfordshire wheel-plough is the best and strongest for most uses, and of the easiest draught. Mortimer.

6. Representation by picture.

Her pencil drew what'er her soul design'd,
And oft the happy draught surpass'd the image in her mind. Dryden.

7. Delineation; sketch; outline.

A good inclination is but the first rude draught of virtue; but the finishing strokes are from the will. South.

I have, in a short draught, given a view of our original ideas, from whence all the rest are derived. Locke.

8. A picture drawn.

Whereas in other creatures we have but the trace of his footsteps, in man we have the draught of his hand: in him were united all the scattered perfections of the creature. South.

9. The act of sweeping with a net.

Upon the draught of a pond not one fish was left, but two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.

10. The quantity of fishes taken by once drawing the net.

He laid down his pipe, and cast his net, which brought him a very great draught. L'Estrange.

11. The act of shooting with the bow.

Geoffrey of Bouillon, at one draught of his bow, shooting against David's tower in Jerusalem, broached three feeble birds called allerions. Camden's Remains.

12. Diversion in war; the act of disturbing the main design; perhaps sudden attack.

I conceive the manner of your handling of the service, by drawing sudden draughts upon the enemy, when he looketh not for you. Spenser's Ireland.

13. Forces drawn off from the main army; a detachment.

Such a draught of forces would lessen the number of those that might otherwise be employed. Addison.

14. A sink; a drain.

Whatsoever entereth in at the mouth goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught. Matt. xv. 17.

15. The depth which a vessel draws, or sinks into the water.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length. Dryden.

With a small vessel one may keep within a mile of the shore, go amongst rocks, and pass over shoals, where a vessel of any draught would strike. Ellis's Voyage.

16. [In the plural, draughts.] A kind of play resembling chess.

DRAUGHTHOUSE. n. s. [draught and house.] A house in which filth is deposited.

And they brake down the image of Baal, and brake down the house of Baal, and made it a draught-house. 2 Kings.

To DRAW. v. a. pret. drew; part. pass. drawn. [Drağan, Saxon.]

Draw the water for the siege. Nath. iii. 14.

5. To suck.

He hath drawn thee dry. Ecclef. xiii. 7.

There was no war, no dearth, no stop of trade or commerce; it was only the crown which had sucked too hard, and now being full, upon the head of a young king, was like to draw less. Bacon's Henry VII.

Sucking and drawing the breast dischargeth the milk as fast as it can be generated. Wise man on Tumours.

6. To attract; to call towards itself.

We see that salt, laid to a cut finger, healeth it; so as it seemeth salt draweth blood, as well as blood draweth salt. Bacon.

Majesty in an eclipse, like the sun, draws eyes, that would not have looked towards it if it had shined out. Suckling.

He affected a habit different from that of the times, such as men had only beheld in pictures, which drew the eyes of most, and the reverence of many towards him. Clarendon.

7. To draw as the magnet does.

She had all magnetic force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Denne.

Draw out with credulous desire, and lead

At will the manliest resolute breast,
As the magnetic hardest iron draws. Milton.

All eyes you draw, and with the eyes the heart;
Of your own power yourself the greatest part, Dryden.

8. To inhale.

Thus I call'd, and stray'd I know not whither,
From where I first drew air, and first beheld
This happy light. Milton's Paradise Lost.

While near the Lucrine lake, consum'd to death,

I draw the sultry air, and gasp for breath,
You taste the cooling breeze. Addison on Italy.

Why drew Marfeilles' good bishop purer breath,
When nature sicken'd, and each gale was death? Pope.

9. To take from any thing containing or holding.

They drew out the staves of the ark. 2 Chron.

When he finds the hardship of slavery outweigh the value of life, 'tis in his power, by resisting his master, to draw on himself death. Locke.

19. To produce or bring as an efficient cause.

When the fountain of mankind
Did draw corruption, and God's curse by sin,
This was a charge that all his heirs did bind,
And all his offspring grew corrupt therein. Sir J. Davies.

Religion will requite all the honour we can do it, by the blessings it will draw down upon us. Tillotson.

Our voluntary actions are the precedent causes of good and evil, which they draw after them,
and bring upon us. Locke.

What would a man value land ready cultivated, and well stocked, where he had no hopes of commerce with other parts of the world to draw money to him by the sale of the product? Locke.

Those elucidations have given rise or increase to his doubts, and drawn obscurity upon places of scripture. Locke.

creased, they drew themselves more westerly towards the Red sea. Raleigh.

21. To protract; to lengthen; to spin.

How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden!
How long her face is drawn! how pale she looks,
And of an earthly cold. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Hear himself repine
At Fate's unequal laws; and at the clue
Which merciless in length the midmost fitter drew. Dryden's Juvenal.

If we shall meet again with more delight,
Then draw my life in length; let me sustain,
In hopes of his embrace, the worst of pain. Dryden's Æneid.

In some families men draw their comparisons into minute particulars of no importance. Felton on the Glafficks.

22. The utter lingeringly.

The brand amid the flaming fuel thrown,
Or drew, or seem'd to draw, a dying groan. Dryden's Fables.

23. To

23. To derive; to have from some original cause or donor.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom draw
The fame right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.
Several wits entered into commerce with the Egyptians, and from them drew the rudiments of sciences. Temple.

24. To deduce as from postulates.
From the events and revolutions of these governments are drawn the usual instructions of princes and statesmen. Temple.

And from your eels their slimy substance wipe. King.

37. To convey a criminal to execution on a sledge.

38. To Draw in. To apply to any purpose by distortion or violence.

A dispute, where every little straw is laid hold on, and every thing that can but be drawn in any way, to give colour to the argument, is advanced with ostentation. Locke.

39. To represent by picture; or in fancy.
I do arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

With his other hand, thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face,
As he would draw it. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Draw the whole world expecting who should reign,
After this combat, o'er the conquer'd main. Waller.

From the soft assaults of love
Poets and painters never are secure:
Can I, untouch'd, the fair one's passions move,
Or thou draw beauty, and not feel its pow'r? Prior.

40. To form a representative image.
The emperor one day took up a pencil which fell from the hand of Titian, who was then drawing his picture; and upon the compliment which Titian made him on that occasion, he said, Titian deserves to be served by Cæsar. Dryden.

The fatal day draws on, when I must fall.

Dryden.

12. To DRAW up. To form troops into regular order.

The lord Bernard, with the king's troops, seeing there was no enemy left on that side, draw up in a large field opposite to the bridge. Clarendon.

13. To DRAW, retains through all its varieties of use, some shade of its original meaning, to pull.
It expresses an action gradual, or continuous, and leisurely. Thus we draw a sword by blows, but we draw it by a continued line. We pour liquor quick, but we draw it in a continued stream.
We force compliance by threats, but we draw it by gradual prevalence. We draw a letter with whatever haste, but we draw a bill with slow scrupu-losity.

glasses;

Let the waiters have eyes, though their tongues must be ty'd. Ben Jonson's Tavern Academy.

A man of fire is a general enemy to all waiters, and makes the drawers abroad, and his footmen at home, know he is not to be provoked. Tatler.

3. That which has the power of attraction.

Love is a flame, and therefore we say beauty is attractive, because physicians observe that fire is a great drawer. Swift.

4. A box in a cask, out of which it is drawn at pleasure.

There may be other and different intelligent beings, of whose faculties he has as little knowledge, or apprehension, as a worm, shut up in one drawer of a cabinet, hath of the senses or understanding of a man. Locke.

We will suppose the China dishes taken off,

and a drawer of medals supplying their room.

Addison on Medals.

5. [In the plural.] The lower part of a man's

As the devil uses witches,

To be their cully for a space,
That, when the time's expir'd, the drawels

For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD. n. f. [dræd, Saxon.]

1. Fear; terror; affright; horror either felt or impressed.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,

When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Let not thy dread make me afraid. Job.

Was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tillotson.

If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terror of eternal misery. Rogers.

2. Habitual fear; awe.

The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Gen. ix. 2.

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.

Let him be your dread. Isaiah.

To thee, of all our good the sacred spring;
To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our foster king. Prior.

DREAD. adj. [dræd, Saxon.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment

On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of foath; Shakespeare, Richard II.

It cannot be, but thou hast murder'd him:
So should a murderer look, so dread, so grim.

Shakespeare.

To be expos'd against the warring winds;
To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder.

Shakespeare.

Terror seiz'd the rebel host,
When, coming towards them, so dread they saw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd.

Milton.

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.

Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n,
Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
The summoning archangels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way. Milton.

DRE'ADLESSNESS. n. f. [from dreadless.] Fearlessness; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelmae, to whom danger then was a cause of dreadlessness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of desire crossed him. Sidney.

DREAM. n. f. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Meric Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from δοῦμα tu his the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram.

Σὺν δὲ τοῖς ὀνείροις ἡ ψυχὴ τῶν ἀνθρώπων
τῶν σπένδων μετατρέφεται, ἢ φέρει τὰς εἰδήσεις. Antbol.

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd labour to some distant shore. Dryden.

Glorious dreams stand ready to restore
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dry.
2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep

A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may engard his dotage. Shaksp. K. Lear.
To DREAM. v. n. preter. dream'd, or dreamt.
[from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke.

I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tatler.

2. It has of before the noun.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Shakespeare.

I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shaksp.
He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust. Burnet's Theory.

He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
'Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare. Dryden.

And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryd.
To DREAM. v. a. To see in a dream,

DRE

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy. Dryden.

At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
And dream the future fight, and early rose. Dryd.

DRE'AMER. n. f. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who fancies in his sleep.

The vision said, and vanish'd from his sight;
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright. Dryden.
If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometime he angers me,
With telling of the moldwarp, and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shakespeare.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reverie.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flow'rs;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

4. A sluggard; an idler.

DRE'AMLESS. adj. [from dream.] Without dreams.

The savages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless. Camden's Remains.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger;
The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful dear. Spenser.

DREAR. adj. [dreopux, Saxon, dreary.] Mournful; dismal; sorrowful.

In urns and altars round,
A dear and dying sound
Affrights the flames at their service quaint. Milt.

DRE'ARYHEAD. n. f. [from dreary.] Horror; dismalness. A word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhood,
Such as she was when Pallas she attempted,
She grew to hideous shape of dearibead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented. Spenser.

DRE'ARMENT. n. f. [from dreary.]

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waters to lament
Your doleful deariment. Spenser's Epithalamium.

2. Horror; dread; terror. This word is now obsolete.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;
Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly food,
Inroll'd in flames and smouldring deariment. Fairy Queen.

DRE'ARY. adj. [dreopux, Saxon.]

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,
With dreary shrieks did also yell;
And hungry wolves continually did howl
At her abhorred face, so horrid and so foul. Fairy Queen.

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led
Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden.

4. To tend to; to consider as the scope and ultimate design.

Authors drive at these as the highest elegancies which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We cannot widely mistake this discourse, when we have found out the point he drives at. Locke.

They look no further before them than the next line; whence it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point, but ramble from one subject to another. Dryden.

We have done our work, and are come within view of the end that we have been driving at. Addison on the War.

5. To aim; to strike at with fury.

Four rogues in backram let drive at me. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

At Auxur's shield he drove, and at the blow Both shield and arm to ground together go. Dryden's Aeneid.

6. To drive, in all its senses, whether active or neuter, may be observed to retain a sense compounded of violence and progression. To DRIVE v. n. [from drip, drip, dribble, drivel.]

1. To flaver; to let the spittle fall in drops, like a child, an idiot, or a dotard. I met with this Chremes, a driveling old fellow, lean, shaking both of head and hands, already half earth, and yet then most greedy of earth. Sidney.

No man could spit from him, but would be forced to drivel like some paralytick, or a fool. Grew.

2. To be weak or foolish; to dote.

This driveling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted, Made four and fenseless, turn'd to whey by love; A driveling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden.

DRIVEL, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Slaver; moisture shed from the mouth. Besides th' eternal drivel, that supplies The dropping beard, from nostrils, mouth and eyes. Dryden.

2. A fool; an idiot; a driveller. This sense is now out of use.

What fool am I, to mingle that drivel's speeches among my noble thoughts? Sidney.

Millions of years this old drivel Cupid lives, While still more wretch, more wicked he doth prove. Sidney.

DRIVELLER, n. f. [from drivel.] A fool; an idiot; a slaverer. I have heard the arrantest drivellers commended for their shrewdness, even by men of tolerable judgment. Swift.

DRIVEN, Participle of drive.

They were driven forth from among men. Job, xxx. 5.

DRIVER, n. f. [from drive.]

1. The person or instrument who gives any motion by violence.

2. One who drives beasts. He from the many peopl'd city flies; Contemns their labours, and the driver's cries. Sandy.

The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death. L'Estrange.

The multitude of common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of men, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to. South.

3. One who drives a carriage. Not the fierce driver with more fury lends The sounding lash, and, ere the stroke descends, Low to the wheels his pliant body bends. Dryden's Virgil.

To DRIZZLE, v. a. [drifelen, German, to shed dew.] To shed in small flow drops, as Winter rains.

When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew. Shakespeare.

Though now this face of mine be hid In fap-confuming Winter's drizzled snow, And all the conduits of my blood froze up, Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakespeare.

To DRIZZLE, v. n. To fall in short flow drops. And drizzling drops that often do redound, The firmest flint doth in continuance wear. Spenser.

Her heart did melt in great compassion, And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection. Fairy Queen.

This day will pour down, If I conjecture aught, no drizzling shower, But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire. Milton.

The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts. Addison on Italy.

DRIZZLY, adj. [from drizzle.] Shedding small rain.

This during Winter's drizzly reign be done, Till the new ram receives th' exalted sun. Dryden's Virgil.

DROIL, n. f. [by Junius understood a contraction of drivel.]

A drone; a sluggard. To DROLL, v. n. To work sluggishly and slowly; to plod.

Let such vile vassals, born to base vocation, Drudge in the world, and for their living droll, Which have no wit to live withouten toyle. Spenser.

Defuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant: the drolling peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond the neighbouring markets. Government of the Tongue.

DROLL, n. f. [droler, French.]

1. One whose business is to raise mirth by petty tricks; a jester; a buffoon; a jackpudding.

As he was running home in all haste, a droll takes him up by the way. L'Estrange.

Why, how now, Andrew! cries his brother droll;

To-day's conceit methinks, is somewhat dull. Prior.

Democritus, dear droll, revisit earth, And with our follies glut thy heighten'd mirth. Prior.

2. A farce; somewhat exhibited to raise mirth. Some as justly fame extols, For lofty lines in Smithfield drolls. Swift.

To DROLL, v. n. [droler, Fr.] To jest; to play the buffoon.

Such august designs as inspire your inquiries used to be decided by drolling fantasticks, that have only wit enough to make others and themselves ridiculous. Glanville.

Men that will not be reasoned into their senses, may yet be laughed or drolled into them. L'Estrange.

Let virtuosoes insult and despise on, yet they never shall be able to droll away nature. South.

DROLLERY, n. f. [from droll.] Idle jokes; buffoonery.

They hang between heaven and hell, borrow the Christians faith, and the atheists drollery upon it. Government of the Tongue.

DROMEDARY, n. f. [dromedare, Ital.]

A sort of camel so called from its swiftness, because it is said to travel a hundred miles a-day. Dromedaries are smaller than common camels, slenderer, and more nimble, and are of two kinds: one larger, with two small bunches, covered with hair, on its back; the other lesser, with one hairy eminence, and more frequently called camel: both are capable of great fatigue. Their hair is soft and thorn: they have no fangs or fore-teeth, nor horn upon their feet, which are only covered with a fleshy skin; and they are about seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of their heads. See CAMEL. Calmat.

Straw

DRO

Straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place. 1 Kings.

And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton.

DRONE. n. f. [drōen, Saxon.]

1. The bee which makes no honey, and is therefore driven out by the rest.

The sad-eyed justice, with his furly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale

The lazy yawning drone. Shakespeare. Henry V.
Luxurious kings are to their people lost;
They live, like drones, upon the publick cost.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.
All, with united force, combine to drive
The lazy drones from the laborious hive.

Dryden's Virgil.
2. A sluggard; an idler.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakespeare.

Sit idle on the household hearth
A burd'ous drone, to visitants a gaze. Milton.
It is my misfortune to be married to a drone, who lives upon what I get, without bringing any thing into the common stock. Addison.

3. The hum, or instrument of humming.

Here while his canting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystic figures of her hand;
He tipples palmestry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleveland.

TO DRONE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in idleness; to dream.

What have I lost by my forefathers fault?
Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long reftive race of droning kings! Dryden.

2. To give a heavy dull tone.

Melloil and honeyfuckles pound,
With these alluring favours strew the ground,
And mix with tinkling brags the cymbal's droning sound. Dryden.

DRONISH. adj. [from drone.] Idle; sluggish;
dreaming; lazy; indolent; unactive.

The dronish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,
Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
To nestle in their ancient hives again. Rowe.

TO DROOP. v. n. [droef, forrow, Dutch.]

1. To languish with sorrow.

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply;
Fasten'd, and fix'd the shame on't in himself. Shakespeare.

I droop, with struggling spent;
My thoughts are on my sorrows bent. Sandys.

2. To faint; to grow weak; to be dispirited.

I find my zenith deth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse, While night's black agents to their prey do rowse. Shakespeare.

When by impulse from heav'n, Tyrtæus sung,
In drooping soldiers a new courage sprung. Rowcommon.

Can flow'rs but droop in absence of the sun,
Which wack'd their sweets? and mine, alas! is gone. Dryden.

Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop. Dryd.

When factious rage to cruel exile drove
The queen of beauty and the court of love,
The mules droop'd with their forsaken arts. Dryd.

I'll animate the soldiers drooping courage,
With love of freedom and contempt of life. Addison's Cato.

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed
he began very much to droop and languish. Swift.

3. To sink; to lean downwards; commonly by weakness or grief.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray,
Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd Laborious, till day droop. Milton's Par. Lost.

DRO

His head, though gay,
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold, Hung drooping, unfasten'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
Which, with a sigh, she rais'd; and this she said. Pope.

DROP. n. f. [drōppa, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the medicine of our country's weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge,
Each drop of us. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine being overpowered by so vast a quantity of water, will be turned into it; he speaks very improbably. Boyle.

Admiring in the gloomy shade,
Those little drops of light. Waller.

Had I but known that Sancho was his father,
I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood
To save one drop of his. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.

The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;
And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine. Pope.

DROP SERENE. n. f. [gutta serena, Lat.] A disease of the eye, proceeding from an inspissation of the humour.

So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd! Milton's Par. Lost.

And drop their anchors on the meads below. Dryden.

One only hag remain'd:
Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,
And dropp'd an aukward court'ry to the knight. Dryden.

St. John himself will scarce forbear
To bite his pen, and drop a tear. Swift.

3. To let go; to dismiss from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could
With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and divest themselves of those visible shapes. Watts's Logic.

4. To utter slightly or casually.

Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac. Amos.

5. To infer indirectly, or by way of digression.

St. Paul's epistles contain nothing but points of Christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to drop in the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion. Locke.

6. To intermit; to cease.

Where the act is unmanly or immoral, we ought to drop our hopes, or rather never entertain them. Collier on Despair.

After having given this judgment in its favour,
they suddenly drop the pursuit. Sharp's Surgery.

7. To quit a master.

I have beat the hoof 'till I have worn out these shoes in your service, and not one penny left me to buy more; so that you must even excuse me, if I drop you here. L'Estrange.

8. To let go a dependant, or companion, without farther association.

She drilled him on to five and fifty, and will drop him in his old age, if she can find her account in another. Addison.

They have no sooner fetched themselves up to the fashion of the polite world, but the town has dropped them. Addison.

Mention either of the kings of Spain or Poland, and he talks notably; but if you go out of the Gazette, you drop him. Addison.

DRO

9. To suffer to vanish, or come to nothing.

Thus was the fame of our Saviour perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditional account of him to after-ages, and rectify it, if, by passing through several generations, it might drop any part that was material. Addison.

Opinions, like fashions, always descend from those of quality to the middle sort, and thence to the vulgar, where they are dropped and vanish. Swift.

10. To bedrop; to speckle; to variegate with

Beneath a rock he figh'd alone,
And cold Lycæus wept from every dropping stone. Dryden.

3. To fall; to come from a higher place.

Philosophers conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars. Gulliver's Travels.

In every revolution, approaching nearer and nearer to the sun, this comet must at last drop into the sun's body. Claughton.

4. To fall spontaneously.

So may'st thou live, 'till, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

5. To fall in death; to die suddenly.

It was your presumption,
That in the dole of blows your soul might drop. Shakespeare.

6. To die.

Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us. Digby to Pope.

7. To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.

Virgil's friends thought fit to let drop this incident of Helen. Addison's Travels.

The poor sleep little: we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning, Midst Winter frosts; then clad and fed with spar-
ing,

Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day. Orway.

Advantages obtained by industry directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glanville.

Soon he came to court,
Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait.

Dryden.

I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging. Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.

What is an age, in dull renown drug'd o'er!
One little fingle hour of love is more. Granville.

DRUDGE, n. f. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me.

Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

He sits above and laughs the while
At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute Whate'er his wrath shall bid. Milton's Par. Lost.

Art thou our slave,
Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,
And dar'st thou, at our sending and command,
Dispute thy coming? Milton's Agonistes.

He is content to be their drudge,
And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras.

The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame and sorrow, and misery.

Tillotson.

DRUDGER, n. f. [from drudge.]

DRU

1. A mean labourer.

2. The drudging-box; the box out of which power is thrown on roast meat. Dick.

DRUDGERY, n. f. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery. Shakespeare.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders, as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,
The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries,
Which they impose. Southey's Oronoko.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Cares be thy lot: reign thou, and let me live.

Dryden.

Paradise was a place of blifs, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow.

Locke.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace-stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer.

It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery.

Swift's Meditations on a Broomstick.

DRUDGINGBOX, n. f. [drudging and box.] The box out of which flower is sprinkled upon roast meat.

But if it lies too long, the crackling's pall'd,
Not by the drudgingbox to be recall'd.

King's Cookery.

DRUDGINGLY, adv. [from drudging.] Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister.

Ray on the Creation.

DRUG, n. f. [drogue, French.]

1. An ingredient used in phyick, a medicinal simple.

A fleet descry'd

Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Judicious phyick's noble art to gain,
He drugs and plants explor'd, alas, in vain! Smith.

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,
Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage.

Pope's Odyssey.

In the names of drug and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life.

Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. It is used sometimes for poison.
Mortal drug I have; but Mantua's law

Is death to any he that utters them. Shakespeare.
And yet no doubts the poor man's draught con-
troul;

He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryden.

3. Any thing without worth or value; any thing for which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice

Shall bear a price,

And virtue shall a drug become:

An empty name,

Was all her fame,

But now she shall be dumb.

Dryden's Albion.

4. A drudge. This seems the meaning here.
He from his first swath proceeded

Through sweet degrees that this brief world affords,

To such as may the passive drugs of it freely command. Shakespeare.

To DRUG, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with ingredients, commonly medicinal.

The surfeited grooms physician of the soul below the drugsters of the body. Atterbury.

DRUM, n. f. [tromme, Danish; drumme, Erse.]

1. An instrument of military musick, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threaten'g drums. Shakespeare.

In drums the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole, far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the
ground,

And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill

Affrights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood.

Philips.

2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.

To DRUM, v. n.

1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.

2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.

Now, heart,

Set open thy sluices, send the vigorous blood
Through every active limb for my relief;

Then take thy rest within the quiet cell;
For thou shalt drum no more. Dryden.

To DRUMBLE, v. n. To drone; to be sluggish.

Hammer.

Take up these cloaths here quickly: where's the cowlstaff? Look, how you drumble: carry them to the landress in Datchet mead.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The under-jaw of the drumfish from Virginia.

Woodward.

DRUMMAJOR, n. f. [drum and major.] The chief drummer of a regiment.

Such company may chance to spoil the swearing;
And the drummajor's oaths, of bulk unruly,

May dwindle to a feeble. Cleveland.

DRUMMAKER, n. f. [drum and maker.] He who deals in drums.

The drummaker uses it, and the cabinetmaker.

Mortimer.

DRUMMER, n. f. [from drum.] He whose office it is to beat the drum.

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.

Shakespeare.

Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
And with their vellum-thunder shake the pile.

Gay.

DRUMSTICK, n. f. [drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.

DRUNK, adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.

This was the morn when issuing on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short assay;

So dry he was for fway. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Void of a bulky charger near their lips, With which, in often interrupted sleep,

Their frying blood compels to irrigate

Their dry furn'd tongues. Philips.

DRY

6. Jeune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our style in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions: either is a vice. Ben Jonson.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within, or without the fabrick, a piece not so dry as the meer contemplation of proportions; and therefore, I hope, therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself.

Wotton's Architecture.

That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant.

Glanville.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it.

L'Estrange.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others. L'Estrange.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilties with which the schools are filled. Burnet's Theory.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament. Pope.

7. Hard; severe. [Drien anciently to endure, dree, Scottish.]

Of two noblemen the one was given to scoff, but keep ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a flout or dry-blow given? Bacon.

I rather hop'd I should no more Hear from you o' th' gallanting score?

For hard dry bastings used to prove The readiest remedies of love;

Next a dry diet. Hudibras.

To DRY. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate. The meat was well, if you were so contented.

—I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dry'd away. Shakesp.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire; as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arefy, Bacon.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best. Bacon.

The running streams are deep: See, they have caught the father of the flock,

Who drys in fleece upon the neighbouring rock. Dryden.

2. To exhale moisture.

DRY'SHOD. adj. [dry and shod.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.

He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod. Sidney.

Dryshod to pass, she parts the floods in tway; And eke huge mountains from their native seat

She would command themselves to bear away. Fairy Queen.

Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?

He has; and hooting boys may dryshod pass, And gather pebbles from the naked ford. Dryden.

DUAL.

DUB

Du'AL. adj. [dualis, Latin.] Expressing the number two.

Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two, and another to signify more than two: under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other of the plural.

To DUB. v. a. [ḡubban zo ḡubeje, Saxon; addubba till riddara, Islandick, to dub a knight. Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword.]

1. To make a man knight.
Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.

The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubb'd, of green or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record.

The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubb'd the lord mayor of London knight.

2. To confer any kind of dignity or new character.

The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.

He
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.

Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart.

As plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious.

O, poet; thou had'st been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,

If thou had'st dubb'd thy star a meteor,
That did but blaze, and rove, and die.

These demoniacs let me dub
With the name of legion club.

A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Antis birth.

DUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.

As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian and with Phrygian dubs.

DUBIOUS. n. f. [from dubius.] A thing doubtful. A word not used.

Men often swallow falsties for truths, dubioussteis for certainties, feasibilitys for possibilities, and things impossible for possible.

DUBIOUS. adj. [dubius, Latin.]

1. Doubtful; not settled in an opinion.

2. Uncertain; that of which truth is not fully known.

No quick reply to dubious questions make.

We also call it a dubious or doubtful proposition, when there are no arguments on either side.

3. Not plain; not clear.

Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light.

4. Having the event uncertain.

His utmost pow'r with adverse pow'r oppos'd,
In dubious battle, on the plains of heav'n.

DUBIOUSLY. adv. [from dubious.] Uncertainly; without any determination.

Authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict definitive truth.

Almanackmakers wander in generals, and talk dubiously, and leave to the reader the business of interpreting.

DUBIOUSNESS. n. f. [from dubious.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness.

She speaks with dubiousness, not with the certainty of a goddess.

DUBITABLE. adj. [dubito, Latin.] Doubtful; uncertain; what may be doubted.

DUBITATION. n. f. [dubitatio, Latin.] The act of doubting; doubt.

DUC

Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitation.

Dubitation may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see, is not what I would see.

DUCAL. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke; as, a ducal coronet.

DUCAT. n. f. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes: in silver valued at about four shillings and six pence; in gold at nine shillings and six pence.

I cannot instantly raise up the grofs
Of full three thousand ducats.

There was one that died in debt: it was reported, where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said, he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine into the other world.

DUCK. n. f. [anas; ducken, to dip, Dutch.]

1. A water fowl, both wild and tame.

The ducks that heard the proclamation cry'd,
And fear a prosecution might betide,

Full twenty mile from town their voyage take,
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake.

Grubs, if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into it.

2. A word of endearment, or fondness.

Will you buy any tape or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck my dear-a?

3. A decline of the head: so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.

Back, shepherds, back; enough your play,
'Till next sunshine holiday:

Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,

Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As mercury did first devise.

4. A stone thrown obliquely on the waters so as to strike it and rebound.

Neither crofs and pile, nor ducks and drakes,
Are quite so ancient as handy-dandy.

To DUCK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dive under water as a duck.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;

And deep himself be ducked in the fame,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steep.

Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low

As hell's from heav'n.

2. To drop down the head, as a duck.

As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears

The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head aside, will start,

And feel a trembling at his heart.

3. To bow low; to cringe. In Scottish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.

I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in mens faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,

Duck with French nods and apish courtesy.

The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool.

To DUCK. v. a. To put under water.

DUCKER. n. f. [from duck.]

1. A diver.

2. A cringer.

She in the ducking stool should take her seat,
Drest like herself in a great chair of state.

Reclaim the obstinately opprobrious and virulent women, and make the ducking stool more useful.

DUCKLEGGED. adj. [duck and leg.] Short legged.

Ducklegg'd, short waisted, such a dwarf she is,
That she must rise on tiptoes for a kifs.

DUCKLING. n. f. [from duck.] A young duck; the brood of the duck.

Ducklings, though hatched and led by a hen, if she brings them to the brink of a river or pond, presently leave her, and in they go.

DUD

Ev'ry morn
Amid' the ducklings let her scatter corn.

DUCKMEAT. n. f. [duck and meat; lens palustris.]

A common plant growing in standing waters.

To DUCKO'Y. v. a. [mistaken for decoy: the decoy being commonly practised upon ducks, produced the error.] To entice to a snare.

This fish hath a slender membranous string, which he projects and draws in at pleasure, as a serpent doth his tongue: with this he duckoys little fishes, and preys upon them.

DUCKCOY. n. f. Any means of enticing and ensnaring.

Seducers have found it the most compendious way to their designs, to lead captive filly women, and make them the duckoys to their whole family.

DUCKSFOOT. n. f. Black snakeroot, or May-apple.

DUCKWEED. n. f. [duck and weed] The same with duckmeat.

That we call duckweed hath a leaf no bigger than a thymeleaf, but of a fresher green; and putteth forth a little string into the water, far from the bottom.

DUCT. n. f. [ductus, Lat.]

1. Guidance; direction.

This doctrine, by fastening all our actions, by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leaves nothing to us but only to obey our fate, to follow the duct of the stars, or necessity of those iron chains which we are born under.

2. A passage through which any thing is conducted: a term chiefly used by anatomists.

A duct from each of those cells ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it.

It was observed, that the chyle in the thoracic duct retained the original taste of the aliment.

DUCTILE. adj. [ductilis, Lat.]

1. Flexible; pliable.

Thick woods and gloomy night
Conceal the happy plant from human light:

One bough it bears; but, wond'rous to behold,
The ductile rind and leaves of radiant gold.

2. Easy to be drawn out into length, or expanded.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn or thread, have the appetite of not discontinuing strong.

Gold, as it is the purest, so it is the softest and most ductile of all metals.

3. Tractable; obsequious; complying; yielding.

He generous thoughts instills
Of true nobility; forms their ductile minds

To human virtues.

Their designing leaders cannot desire a more ductile and easy people to work upon.

DUCTILENESS. n. f. [from ductile.] Flexibility; ductility.

I, when I value gold, may think upon
The *ductile*ness, the application;

The wholesomeness, the ingenuity,
From rust, from soil, from fire ever free.

DUCTILITY. n. f. [from ductile.]

1. Quality of suffering extension; flexibility.

Yellow colour and ductility are properties of gold: they belong to all gold, but not only to gold; for saffron is also yellow, and lead is ductile.

2. Obsequiousness; compliance.

DU'GEON. n. f. [dolch, German.]

1. A small dagger.

It was a serviceable dugeon,
Either for fighting of for drudging.

2. Malice; fullness; malignity; ill will.

DUE

Civil dugeon first grew high,
And men fell out they knew not why. Hudibras.
The cuckoo took this a little in dugeon.

who had credit enough to give rise to some new word. Swift.

DUNG. n. f. [dinez, Saxon.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For durg, all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment. Bacon's Natural Hist.

I judge the likeliest way to be the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung, with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days. Bacon's Natural History.

For when from herbs the pure part must be
won,

From grofs by 'stilling, this is better done
By despis'd dung, than by the fire or sun. Donne.

DUR

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a duplicate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glaifes, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newton's Opticks.

DUPLICATE. n. f. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplici- cates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid. Wifeman's Surgery.

DUPPLICATE. n. f. [from duplicate.] A fold;
any thing doubled.

The lympheducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes.

Ray on the Creatinn.

DUPPLICITY. n. f. [duplicitis, Latin.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at one.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue.

DURABILITY. n. f. [durabilis, Lat.] The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hooker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh's History.

DURABLE. adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable. Raleigh's History.

With pins of adamant,

And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made.

And durable! Milton's Paradise Lost.

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, apply'd
To motion, measures all things durable

By present, past, and future. Milton.

DURABLENESS. n. f. [from durable.] Power of lasting; continuance.

The different consistence and durableness of the strata wherein they consist, are more or less.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it.

ADDISON ON ANCIENT MEDALS.

DURABLY. adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in mens memories. Sidney.

DURANCE. n. f. [from dureffe, law French.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jaylor; a prison.

Thy

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in safe durance and contagious prison;
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shakes.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate;
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In durance scarce three inches wide. Hudibras.
Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance.
Congreve's Old Batchelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration. A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durance was this new made state!
How far more mighty than heav'n's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

DUR'ATION. n. f. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration, that it should have a due length in it.
Addison's Spectator.

To DURE. v. n. [dureo, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh's History.

DUR'FUL. adj. [from endure and full.] Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dry'd,
Is long ere it conceive the kindling fire;
But when it once doth burn, it doth divide
Great heat, and makes his flames to heaven aspire.
Spenser.

DUR'LESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh's History.

DURESS. n. f. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. [In law.] A plea used by way of exception, by him who being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint.
This law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DUR'ING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure; as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DUR'ITY. n. f. [dureté, French; durus, Latin.]
Hardness; firmness.

Ancients did burn of fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durity, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Wotton's Architecture.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DURST. The preterite of dare.

The Christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUSK. adj. [duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured.

The hills to their supply,
Vapour, and exhalation dusk, and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton's Paradise Lost.

DUSK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Tendency to darkness; incipient obscurity.
I will wait on you in the dusk of the evening, with my shov upon my back. Spectator.

2. Darknes of colour; tendency of blackness.
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.

To DUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To make dusky. Dict.

To DUSK. v. n. To grow dark; to begin to lose light or brightness; to have lustre diminished.
Dict.

DUSKILY. adv. [from dusky.] With a tendency to darkness or blackness.

DUSKISH. adj. [from dusk.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light, Enrolled in dusky smoke, and brimstone blue. Spenser.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

Sight is not contented with fudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a dusky tincture than an absolute black. Wotton's Architecture.

DUSKISHLY. adv. [from dusky.] Cloudily;
darkly.

The sawdust burned fair, till part of the candle consumed: the dust gathering about the snaff, made the snaff to burn dusky. Bacon's Natural History.

DUSKY. adj. [from dusk; duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort. Shakespeare.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.

Through the plains of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot

The means that dusky Dis my daughter got. Shakespeare.

It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour, Bacon.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Woodward.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper;
but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey or dun, or ruflet brown. Newton's Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horror, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy. Bentley's Sermons.

Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
As ever fully'd the fair face of li ht,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. f. [duert, Saxon; duist, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust

Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n, Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, inasmuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering;

when a shower cometh, maketh a foiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physick must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shakes. Cymbel.
Then
Out of the ground waft taken; know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust to return. Milton.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Sam. ii. 8.
To DUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from dust.

2. To sprinkle with dust.

DUSTMAN. n. f. [dust and man] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.
The dustman's cart offends thy cloaths and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DUSTY. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.

All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakespeare.

Arms and the dusty fields I less admire,
And soften strangely in some new desire. Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer.

DUTCH. n. f. [duchse, French.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutche, will be here. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The duke was to command the army, and the dutche, by the favour she possessed, to be near her Majesty. Swift.

The gen'rous god, who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens minds,
Kept dross for dutche, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

DUTCHY. n. f. [duché, French.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Bern. Addison on Italy.

France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DUTCHYCOURT. n. f. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowell.

DUTEOUS. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success. Dryden.

A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryden.

Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,

To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass? Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes; with to.

I know thee well; a serviceable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistresses,
As badness would desire. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

3. Enjoin'd by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakespeare.

DUTIFUL. adj. [duty and full.]

VOL. I. N^o. 15.

3 Y

1. Obe-

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiors; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift to Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing she thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney.

DUTIFULLY, adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.

2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miss curiously watching her. Sidney.

He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

DUTIFULNESS, n. f. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

DUTY, n. f. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded, you say we are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke xvii. 10.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shakespeare.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine Assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine Assistance. Taylor's Devotion.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governors, or superiors; loyalty; piety to parents.

Thinkest thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound when majesty to folly falls.

Shakespeare. King Lear.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater; it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both atone;

Dill duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarend.
Otho, as often as Galba supped with him, used to give every foldier upon duty an aureus.

Arbutnot on Coins.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and fevered them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.

See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!

For sev'n long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay. Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison.

Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law.

Arbutnot on Coins.

DWARF, n. f. [ὑπεοργ, Saxon; dwerf, Dutch.]

1. A man below the common size of men.
Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grafs made. Shakespeare.

Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown.

They but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs in narrow room Throng numberless. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.
In a delicate plantation of trees, all well-grown, fair, and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision. L'Estrange.

Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Mortimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftsoones dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the dwarf a-while his needful spear he gave. Spenser.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition; as, dwarf elder, dwarf honeysuckle.

To DWARF, v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread.

Bacon's Natural History.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWARFISH, adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk: low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were,
As cherubins, all gilt. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shakespeare.

This unheard sawciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakespeare. King John.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood. Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley.

DWARFISHLY, adj. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

DWARFISHNESS, n. f. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm.

Glanville's Scipis.

To DWAALE, v. a. [ὑπελαν, Sax. to wander; dwaelen, Dutch.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

To DWELL, v. n. preterite dwelt, or dwelled. [duala, old Teutonic, is stay, delay; duelia, Islandick, to stay, to stand still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have an habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Lev. xxv. 39.

He shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Lev. xiii. 46.

John Haywood and Sir Thomas Moore, in the parish wherein I was born, dwelt and had possessions. Peacocks.

Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?
Here dwell no frowns, nor anger; from these gates Sorrow flies far. Milton.

2. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Heb. xi. 9.

3. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakespeare.

4. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He in great passion all this while did dwell;
More buying his quick eyes, her face to view,
Than his dull ears, to hear what she did tell. Spenser.

Th' attentive queen

Dwelt on his accents. Smith's Phœd. and Hippolitus.

Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled, stemm'd the tides to Troy. Pope.

5. To continue long speaking.
He preach'd the joys of heav'n, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell. Dryden's Good Parson.

We have dwelt pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.

Those who defend our negotiators, dwell upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

To DWELL, v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth

To town or village nigh. Milton's Par. Regained.

DWELLER, n. f. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon's Henry VII.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryden.

DWELLING, n. f. [from dwell.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy shore. Fairy Queen.

Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jeremiah, xlix. 33.

If he have several dwellings, let him fort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign

To visit oft the dwellings of just men, Delighted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

All dwellings else

Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea, Sea without shore! Milton's Paradise Lost.

The living few, and frequent funerals then,
Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their dwellings trace. Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky. Dryden's Ovid.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field. Daniel.

DWELLINGHOUSE, n. f. [from dwell and house.]

The house at which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he had in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DWELLINGPLACE, n. f. [dwell and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up in strength. Spenser.

To DWINDLE, v. n. [ὑπαν, Saxon.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave. Dryden.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in modern languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison.

ONE

D W I

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought;
Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun. Thomson.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff.

Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects; why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.

He found the expected council was dwindling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers. Atterbury.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary seven nights nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

We see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.

D Y S

Physicians with their milky cheer,
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair.

Gay.

4. To fall away; to be diminished; to moulder off.
Under Greenvil, there were only five hundred foot and three hundred horse left; the rest were dwindled away. Clarendon.

DYE. See DIE.

DYING. The participle of die.

1. Expiring; giving up the ghost.

2. Tinging; giving a new colour.

DY'NASTY. n. f. [dynastia.] Government; sovereignty.

Some account him fabulous, because he carries up the Egyptian dynasties before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Greece was divided into several dynasties, which our author has enumerated under their respective princes. Pope.

DY'SCRASY. n. f. [dy'scrasia.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood or nervous juice: a dyscrasy, when some humour or quality abounds in the body. Di't.

In this pituitous dyscrasy of blood, we must vomit off the pituita, and purge upon intermissions.

D Y S

Floyer on the Humours.

DYSENTERY. n. f. [dysenteria, French, from dy'senteria.] A looseness, wherein very ill humours flow off by stool, and are also sometimes attended with blood. Di't.

From an unusual inconstancy of the weather, and perpetual changes of the wind from East to West, proceed epidemical dysenteries.

Arbutnot on Air.

DYSPEPSY. n. f. [dyspepsia.] A difficulty of digestion, or bad fermentation in the stomach or guts. Di't.

speaking, occasioned by an ill disposition of the organs. Di't.

DYSPNOEA. n. f. [dyspnœa.] A difficulty of breathing; straitness of breath.

DY'SURY. n. f. [dy'suria.] A difficulty in making urine.

It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the hamor-rhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, continual pissing, or a hot dysuria, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E A C

E, Has two sounds; long, as scène, and short, as men. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, cân, câne; mân, mâne; gâp, gâpe; glâd, glâde; brêd, brêde; chîn, chîne; whîp, whîpe; thîn, thîne; nôd, nôde; tîm, tîme; plûm, plûme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as gêne, knowlêde, êde, gîve.
Anciently almost every word ended with e, as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterwards it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word;
as mên, mêan; fêl, fêal; mêt, mêat; nêt, nêat.

EACH. pron. [elc, Saxon; elcb, Dutch; ilk, Scottish.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of diff'rent greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd. Milton.

Let each

His adamant coat gird well, and each Fit well his helm. Milton.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides.

Milton's Paradise Regained.

Wife Plato said, the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Let each esteem other better than themselves.

Phil. ii. 3.

E A G

Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine.

Addison's Cato.

EAD. [æd, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness, or blessedness.
Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Macarius Eupolemus, Fausla, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eatb, which signifies easy, gentle, mild. Gib. Camden.

EA'GER. adj. [eagor, Saxon; aigre, French.]
1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought,

Dryden's Ovid.

Eager to read the rest, Achates came.
Dryden's Æneid.

With joy th' ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryden.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addison's Ovid.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.

Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the sounding brafs of old to the labouring moon.

Glauville's Sceptis.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge.

Spratt.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryd.
A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

E A G

His Numidian genius

Is well dispos'd to mischief, were he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spur'd.

Addison's Cato.

5. Sharp sower; acid.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
The flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager.

Bacon's Natural History.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whoever died in that expedition was a martyr? Saunders.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney.

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Anthony were all inclos'd. Shakespeare.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of Winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles's History of the Turks.

EA'GERNESS. n. f. [from eager.]

1. Keenness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint.

Shakespeare.

Have you not seen, when whistled from the fist,
Some falcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd.

Dryden.

E A G

The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge, if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.

Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour. Addison's Frecholder.

Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love. Addison's Cato.

His continued application to public affairs diverts him from those pleasures which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the public so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eagerness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.
It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste. Dryden.

EAGLE. n. f. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; eallor, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey, which, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young too well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back. Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmet.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.
Arts still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew.
EAGLE-EYED. adj. [from eagle and eyed.] Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

As he was quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and versed in the humours of his subjects. Howell.

Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.

EAGLESPEED. n. f. [eagle and speed.] Swiftnefs like that of an eagle.

Abrupt, with eaglespeed she cut the sky, Instant invisible to mortal eye. Pope.

EAGLESTONE. n. f. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder. Cabinet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone, thus containing another within it, or as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery: so that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill's Materia Medica.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the petites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon.

EAGLET. n. f. [from eagle.] A young eagle.
This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets trying on her breast, and the fourth pecking at one of her eyes. Davies.

EAGLE. n. f. [eager, in Runick, is the ocean; aggia, in Islandick, is to agitate, to incite.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn.

E A R

For as an eagle rides in triumph o'er the tide,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,

And flash'd upon the soul with equal force. Dryd.
EALDERMAN. n. f. ealþeþman, Saxon. The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

EAME. n. f. [eam, Saxon; com, Dutch.] Uncle: a word still used in the wilder parts of Staffordshire.

Daughter, says she, fly; fly; behold thy dame
Forethows the treason of thy wretched eame! Fairfax.

EAR. n. f. [eape, Saxon, oor, Dutch.]

1. The whole organ of audition or hearing.
What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd! Shakespeare's Much Ado.

His ears are open unto their cry. Pf. xxxiv. 15.
Vulvalva discovered some passages into the region of the ear drum; of mighty use, among others, to make discharges of bruises. Desham's Physico Theology.

2. That part of the ear that stands prominent.
You have heard of the news abroad: I mean,
the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear kissing arguments. Shakespeare.

His master shall bore his ear through with an awl. Exodus.

3. Power of judging of harmony; the sense of hearing.

She has a delicate ear, and her voice is musick. Richardson.

4. The head; or the person: in familiar language.

When I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford. Shakespeare's Richard III.

EARLINESS. n. f. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, ear- liness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turrets. Sidney.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

EARLY. adj. [æp, Saxon, before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me. Shak.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early, and some come late. Bacon's Natural History.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church,
what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour? South.

The nymphs, forsaking ev'ry cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring. Pope.

Sickness is early old age: it teaches us diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with thoughts of a future. Pope.

Oh foul of honour!
Oh early heroes! Smith's Phœdra and Hippolitus.

EARLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betimes.

Early before the morn, with crimson ray,
The windows of bright heav'n opened had. Spem.

Those arts, which you so early know. Waller.

The princess makes her issue like herself, by insinuating early into their minds religion, virtue and honour. Addison.

TO EARN. v. a. [earnian, Saxon.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon's Essays.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milt.

I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milt.

Men may discern
From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men. Milton.

Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing.
Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.

The poems gained the plagiary wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them. Pope on Homer.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a flock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critick's prey. Swift.

E A R

2. To obtain, as a consequent of action.
I can't say where;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mafs of vanity could make me. Shakespeare.

EA'RNEST. adj. [eopnert, Saxon.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which hear-eth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hooker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.

On that prospect strange
Their earnest eyes they fix'd; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude
Now ris'n to work them further woe or shame. Milton.

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Duppa.

3. Serious; important. Some say in earnest, not in jest.

They whom earnest lets do often hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet this the length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

EA'RNEST. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Seriousness; a serious event, not a jest; reality, not a feigned appearance

all-merciful and almighty God. Smalridge.

2. Eagerly; desirously.

Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?
Shakespeare.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will outstrip her's; as bullets flown before,
A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.

E A R

EA'RNESTNESS. n. f. [from earnest.]
1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it. Shakespeare's Othello.

Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that, besides the very daring and earnestness, and perfisting and im-portunity, there should be some secret binding, and stooping of other mens spirits to such persons.

Bacon's Natural History.

Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison's Cato.

2. Solemnity; zeal; seriousness.

There never was a charge maintained with such a shew of gravity and earnestness, which had a slighter foundation to support it. Atterbury.

EA'THLINE. n. f. [from earth.] An inhabitant of the earth; a mortal; a poor frail creature.

To earthlings, the footstool of God, that stage which he raised for a small time, seemeth magnificent. Drummond.

EA'THLY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; fordid.

But I remember now

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudible; to do good, sometime Accounted dangerous folly. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When faith and love, which parted from thee never,

Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,
Meekly thou didst resign thy earthly load
Of death, call'd life. Milton.

2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known. Hooker.

You have scarce time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span

To keep your earthly audit. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects. Altenbury.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,
For God he often saw, from heaven light,
All were his earthly eyes both blunt and bad. Spenser.

Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,

An earthly lover lurking at her heart. Pope.

4. Any thing in the world; a female hyperbole.

Oh; if to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old-age away,
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce?

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use? Pope.

EA'THNUY. n. f. [earth and nut.] A pignut; root in shape and size like a nut.

Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent, root only where they grow. Ray.

EA'THQVAKE. n. f. [earth and quake.] Tremor or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stop'd, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake. Woodward's Natural History.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horror. King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,

These might perhaps be found in other men:

'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;

That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,

And with a silent earthquake shook his soul. Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison on Italy.

EA'THSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.] Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,
And Tethys grave majestic pace. Milton.

Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking
pow'r,

Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;
Back to their caves she bade the winds to fly,

And hush'd the blustering brethren of the sky. Pope.

EA'THWORM. n. f. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants. Bacon's Natural History.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking places. Ray.

2. A mean fordid wretch.

Thy vain contempt, dull earthworm, cease;
I won't for refuge fly. Norris.

EA'THY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Consisting of earth.

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,

And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit! Shakespeare.

Lamps are inflamed by the admission of new air, when the sepulchres are opened, as we see in fat earthy vapours of divers sorts. Wilkins's Mathematical Magic.

All water, especially that of rain, is stored with matter, light in comparison of the common earthy matter. Woodward.

2. Composed of partaking of earth; terrene.

To survey his dead and earthy image,

What were it but to make my sorrow greater. Shakespeare.

Him lord pronounce'd, he, O indignity!

Subjected to his service angel-wings,

And flaming ministers to watch and tend

Their earthy charge. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.

Those earthy spirits black and envious are;

I'll call up other Gods of form more fair. Dryden.

4. Relating to earth.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a wat'ry sign;

And in an earthy, the dark dungeon thine. Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and
speak;

Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,

The folded meaning of your words deceit. Shak.

Nor is my flame

So earthy, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham's Sephy.

EAS

EASE. n. f. [aife, French.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not folicitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold
To lead it to the wars and to the seas;

To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease. Davies.

The priest on skins of off'rings takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,

Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,

And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain. Dryden.

5. Unconstrained; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or conceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance. Pope.

6. At Ease. In a state of undisturbed leisure;
without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan content with praise, may lie at ease

In costly grots and marble palaces. Dryden's Juvenal.

Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their eases, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

To Ease. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude. 2 Chronicles.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief. Shakespeare.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease. Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbutnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?

And can our tears reverse his firm decrees? Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends: with of before the thing.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear;

And that thou may'st not be too late abroad
Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load. Dryden.

I will ease me of mine adversaries. Illa. 1. 24.

No body feels pain that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

EASEFUL. adj. [ease and full.] Quiet; peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious fun,

Ere he attain his easeful western bed. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

EASEMENT. n. f. [from ease.]

1. Assistance; support; relief from expences.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements. Swift.

2. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit;

E A S

profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like. Cowel.

EASILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon's Natural History.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;

She ask'd but with an air and mien

That made it easily foreseen

She fear'd too much to know. Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can? Templ.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryd. Ded. to State of Innocence.

Not soon provok'd, the easily forgives;

And much she suffers, as she much believes. Prior.

EASINESS. n. f. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid With half the easiness that they are rais'd. Ben Jonson.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength. Tiltsfon.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered. Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half achiev'd, And for whose easiness I almost griev'd. Dryden.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers. Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them. Hooker.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable fore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy. Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own. South.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves. Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort; not formality.

Abstruse and mystick thoughts you must express With painful care, but seeming easiness; For truth shines brightest through the plainest dress. Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep. Ray.
